Arab Union In Trouble

DAMASCUS (UPI) — Government shakeups hit Syria and Iraq Saturday, foreshadowing possible trouble ahead for the proposed new United Arab Republic.

In Damascus Syrian Premier Salah Bitar quit in the wake of a week of rioting by students and cabinet resignations.

Another government crisis forced the resignation of the cabinet in Iraq.

Bitar quit in the face of demonstrations by supporters of U.A.R. President Nasser, guiding light of the proposed new U.A.R. to be composed of the present United Arab Republic (Egypt, Syria, and Iraq).

COLUMBIA SIGNING NEAR

(Special to the Colonist)

B.C. will be approached "at once ... in a day or two" with the new Liberal government's proposals for adjustments in the Columbia River treaty, Prime Minister Pearson said Saturday.

In Victoria, Lands Minister Williston greeted the news with the prediction "I'm sure he will" include approval of the main roadblock—sale in the U.S. of downstream benefit energy generated in the U.S.

Mr. Pearson and President Kennedy said in their communique after two days of talks in Hyannis Port, Mass., there should be immediate two-government discussions to provide early elimination of the last barriers to ratification of the treaty.

The communique disclosed Mr. Pearson had proposed certain clarifications and adjustments, which he didn't make public, as a protocol to the treaty.

Indications were B.C. would be notified of their nature early this week.

Mr. Pearson said he would make arrangements to proceed "promptly with the further detailed negotiations required with the U.S. and with the necessary action within Canada."

The president agreed the U.S. and Canada should start talks at once on the protocol plan, presumably settling it before the treaty goes before the House of Commons for ratification during the session beginning Thursday.

Mr. Pearson hinted Mr. Kennedy had no objections to the changes.

Mr. Williston said sale of benefit energy "has to be included or we can't do business" but added the difficulty is not the sale but the arrangement by which the sale takes place.

"I don't think (B.C.) has any real basic conflict with any of the Liberal group on sale," he said.

Asked if he felt Mr. Pearson would include sale in the protocol plan, Mr. Williston said: "I'm sure he will and if arrangements for sale can be handled I don't think there'll be any great difficulties."

Pact Reached On Warheads

HYANNIS PORT, Mass. (CP) — Prime Minister Pearson and President Kennedy reached an understanding Saturday which a high U.S. official said might result in nuclear warheads on Canadian missiles within four months.

The agreement was a high spot of the two days of friendly and informal talks at the president's summer home here.

Both Pearson and Kennedy left here soon after issuing a comprehensive communique showing that a large measure of agreement had been reached in the meeting, arranged to ease tension between the two countries.

The communique did not mention nuclear warheads specifically, but a U.S. official told reporters that this was the meaning of a sentence referring to Canadian defence commitments.

The prime minister confirmed his government's intention to initiate discussions with the United States without delay towards the fulfillment of Canada's existing defence commitments in North America and Europe, consistent with Canadian parliamentary procedures.

Pearson frequently used similar language during the recent election campaign to refer to a 1959 agreement under which he said the government of former prime minister Diefenbaker had agreed to accept nuclear warheads for Canada's Bomarc missiles and Voodoo jet interceptors.

U.S. officials said Pearson had definitely accepted this commitment.

Well before the end of the session.

Chair And Flag

HYANNIS PORT (CP, UPI) — Prime Minister Pearson and President Kennedy exchanged gifts Saturday after their two-day talks, then received a gift for their two nations.

Mr. Pearson gave Mr. Kennedy an 1840 "arrow back" rocking chair obtained from an old house in the Ottawa Valley. Mr. Kennedy replied with the presidential flag from the Kennedy family compound here and a silver cigarette case.

The two leaders accepted "with deep appreciation" the donation of Franklin Roosevelt's summer home and estate on Campobello Island in New Brunswick.

Gift was made by Occidental Petroleum Corp. president Arnold Hammer, 61, who bought the area from Elliott Roosevelt in 1953.

The place where FDR battled polio will be jointly administered by the U.S. and Canada for public purposes to commemorate Roosevelt "appropriately as a great president and a good friend of Canada."

Mr. Williston said sale of benefit energy "has to be included or we can't do business" but added the difficulty is not the sale but the arrangement by which the sale takes place.

Briton Imprisoned

Russian Must Die

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet scientific worker has been sentenced to die before a firing squad for spying for Britain and the United States while a British businessman drew an eight-year prison term for helping the Russians.

Col. Oleg Penkovsky, an admitted traitor to the Soviet Union, was ordered executed. Greville Wynne, the businessman, was sentenced to prison with five years of his terms to be served at hard labor.

The highest Soviet military court pronounced the sentences Saturday.

Penkovsky seemed shaken. He gulped several times. Wynne took his sentence rather calmly. Each is 44. Each is a veteran of the Second World War.

There was a 30-second burst of applause from 400 Russian spectators at the sentencing, climax of a five-day show trial, though some muttered that Wynne got off too lightly.

The court recommended that the Soviet foreign ministry take cognizance of the continued presence in this country of some Western diplomats named in the indictment as part of the alleged spy network that fed 5,000 pictures of secret Soviet documents into Western hands in 18 months. Though they are not subject to Soviet law, the Soviet Union could demand their withdrawal. The court followed the recommendation of the prosecutor, Lt. Gen. Artem Gornoy, in ordering the death of Penkovsky, a former deputy chief of the state committee on scientific research.

Europeans Planning Air Rate Strategy

THE HAGUE (UPI) — The governments of 12 European nations met Saturday to confront the U.S. government with a co-ordinated European air fare, informed sources reported.

The sources said KLM Royal Dutch Airlines has been advised by the Dutch government to charge the increased trans-Atlantic fares starting today.

These were the latest developments in the trans-Atlantic air transport fare dispute that arose when two U.S. carriers refused to raise their trans-Atlantic return fares by 5 per cent, on the basis of an agreement recently concluded by the International Air Transport Association.

DENY LANDING Several European countries, led by Britain, announced Friday they would deny both Pan American World Airways and Trans World Airlines landing rights.

The British aviation ministry in London said that, if the two U.S. airlines do not comply, they will not be allowed to land at British airports.

A government source said it will not carry out this decision for "at least a few more days," presumably waiting until after a meeting of the International

Western observers in Moscow speculated the Russians might be planning to check flaws in current models of their space rockets as well as to seek development of new ones for future manned space flights. The Russians have hinted several times earlier this year that they will seek to place a woman in orbit.

Human Target Gets Revenge

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — Pvt. Daniel J. Arthur, 17, the terrified target of Coulee Crest, will have his chance to shoot back.

The soldier from Los Angeles spent 10 hours under bombardment by live ammunition and napalm bombs in the air force-army manoeuvre "Exercise Coulee Crest."

Live ammunition now has been withdrawn from the "Red" forces according to plan, and the "Blues," to which Arthur is attached as a pioneer in an engineering unit, will fire the real McCoy early in the week.

But there will be no live targets.

Arthur was to guard a supposed mine field and to be taken captive by the Red forces before the firing began.

Actually, Arthur was asleep in his pup tent when the firing started.

Finally tanks began rolling into the area, and one fired a round which hit nearby and sprayed Arthur with rocks and dirt. He saw men moving over a hill; small-arms fire ricocheted around him. He stood up and yelled, and that ended the war in Arthur's sector.

Liquor Store Snake Pit

MIAMI (UPI) — A teen-aged youth, disgruntled because a liquor store owner refused to sell him a bottle of whiskey, emptied four bags of black snakes on the store floor Saturday.

"It was like we had a carpet of snakes," said Miss Sylvia Lambert, the owner. "It was a real wriggly mess."

The 100 snakes were removed by personnel from Miami University, who plan to use them in research.

"It always WAS an unlucky house. The last tenant did a moonlight fill—an' this one WON'T!"

Doctor's Bag Found

Oak Bay police Saturday recovered a doctor's bag which had been stolen from a parked car at Walbran Park on Friday.

It was at first believed the bag had been stolen for the drugs it contained, but police said the contents of the bag were intact when found in some bushes near where it disappeared.

The bag was stolen when Dr. Vincent W. Smith, of 1111 Beach, left his car unlocked for a few minutes while showing a friend the view from Gonzales Hill.

Your Good Health

It's Waste of Time to Take Mail Order Nursing Course

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

Dear Dr. Molner: I have been planning to take a home study course in practical nursing. My friends tell me it would be a waste of time because doctors do not recognize it and there isn't any actual hospital training. Are my friends right?—M.F.

Yes, because you cannot become an LPN (licensed practical nurse) through a mail order course of study.

I suppose you'd be bound to pick up some information, but even if you then got work as an aide in a hospital you would still have to take the in-service training that most hospitals require.

A better way is to find out what practical nurse training classes are available in your locality. Some are run in connection with hospitals.

Since the situation varies from place to place, inquire through a local hospital, or get in touch with a nursing bureau or nursing association.

With our continuing need for more nurses, you'd find such organizations co-operative. Likewise the more training you receive, the more money you earn.

Dear Dr. Molner: Do you think a boy should see his mother undressed? My aunt has raised her son to let her see the bathroom often while she is in the tub. She believed it is better to let a boy know than to be curious. What is your opinion?—J.G.

Maybe I'm old-fashioned, but I still think there is a place for modesty. At our house, if the bathroom door is closed it means somebody is using it, so stay out.

On the other hand if a youngster happens inadvertently to walk in on an adult we've never felt it right to fuss, scold, or, indeed, make anything of it. This simply piques curiosity in a youngster, or (worse) makes him think he has done something "bad."

Just be casual about it, no harm has been done. I see no benefit in encouraging any such thing.

Dear Dr. Molner: The doctor has diagnosed my daughter's problem as swimmer's ear. All this is very painful. Is it contagious?—Mrs. M.S.

This is usually a fungus infection acquired in lakes, rivers or streams. Not in salt water. It is also unlikely to be acquired in a chlorinated swimming pool. No, it is not contagious in the sense of being passed from one person to another.

Dear Dr. Molner: I have heard of an egg diet—nothing but eggs—that I would like to try. What is your opinion of it? I thought that while on ANY kind of a diet it might be wise to have a vitamin supplement. Do you agree?—Miss A.M.

I don't think that any diet of only one food is either logical or useful. If you go on a diet (for reducing, I presume) choose one that gives you smaller amounts of everything, with variety of taste and appearance—from vitamins and minerals to calories—and you will not have to buy vitamins to make up for what you are missing. Fast diets are for the birds.

and co-ordination. But it lapsed two years off Gorny's recommendation of 10 years in prison for Wynne.

TRICKED HIM

Wynne contended in his testimony that the British Intelligence Service tricked him into serving as a courier for Soviet military, political and economic secrets ferreted out by Penkovsky. And he pleaded for clemency just before the sentences were pronounced, saying this was the 11th birthday of his son Andrew.

SEES WIFE

"It will be such a shock for my little boy that I am not with him to wish him many happy returns," Wynne said. "I ask you to remember my son, my wife and my aged father."

Mrs. Wynne, 42, barred from contact with her husband throughout the trial, was permitted to spend 30 minutes alone with him after the close. Wynne was told he will be allowed to see her once again.

Supplementing the death sentence for Penkovsky, a Soviet reserve colonel whose official duties with the scientific committee threw him into contact with many Westerners, was by court order stripped of his military rank, all medals and Second World War decorations. His personal property was ordered confiscated, as was Wynne's.

Pact on Warheads

It said the two leaders "are arranging for more frequent consultations at all levels in order that the intentions of each government may be more fully appreciated by the other, and misunderstandings may be avoided."

On specific issues, the communiqué made these points:

1. Kennedy and Pearson reaffirmed the importance of a defence-production sharing program and the need to co-operate in using the continent's national resources such as oil, gas, electricity and strategic metals.

2. They agreed to co-operate closely in forthcoming trade negotiations designed to carry out President Kennedy's drastic international tariff reduction plan.

AIR TRAVEL

3. The two governments will begin discussions shortly on possible improvements in air travel between the two countries.

4. A joint conference will be set up to bring U.S. and Canadian labor leaders and government officials together in an effort to settle the Great Lakes shipping controversy.

Negro Girl Given Salon's Apologies

TORONTO—A Windsor beauty parlor operator agreed to apologize and welcome any further appointment made by a Negro girl who was turned away from the shop.

Lee Ann Hawkins, operator of the Lee Ann Beauty Salon, made the apology to Louis Fina, chairman of the Ontario Human Rights Commission in Toronto.

The commission was called in by Bonnie Peterson of Ottawa, the daughter of a Windsor policeman, who complained she had been refused service at the beauty salon during a visit to the city.

OTTAWA—Justice Minister O'Brien has ordered new priorities in the federal government's prison-building program to relieve some of the strains which have brought prison violence in recent months.

NOUMEA, New Caledonia—Aviator Mrs. Betty Miller, nearing her goal to become the first woman to fly the Pacific alone, has resumed the final leg of her journey. She made an unscheduled landing here Sunday morning but a few hours later resumed her flight to Brisbane, Australia, her final destination. She is expected to reach Brisbane later this morning.

DES MOINES, Iowa—City fireman Donald F. Farnham has been fined $105 for 13 delinquent traffic tickets—excluding one for parking too close to a fire hydrant.

NEW YORK—A Varig Airlines pilot, Gerald Segala, 29, stricken during a flight from Buenos Aires, died of apparent heart attack shortly after his arrival at Idlewild Airport. He was not piloting the plane at the time of the attack. A surgeon aboard the plane, Dr. Clarence Crafoord of Stockholm, assisted by stewardess Yvonne Stepler, 32, tried to save Segala's life by making an incision in his windpipe.

LONDON—The Earl of Breadalbane said he was consulting his lawyer about a pub called "The Earl of Breadalbane" that opened in Scotland last month without his permission. "I feel they are taking advantage of me," his lordship said.

LOS ANGELES—Comedian Leamy Brown, who has encountered trouble with the law here, in Chicago, Philadelphia and Miami, won dismissal of a fugitive warrant against him.

VANCOUVER—Will Feinberg, 37, swam three-quarters of a mile across Vancouver's English Bay Friday to prove smoking hasn't affected his health. He smokes two packages of cigarettes a day.

DAYTON, Ohio—The United States is $20,000 richer due to the bequest of Scots immigrant Mary S. Campbell, who died in July, 1962 at the age of 93. Mrs. Campbell was a retired army nurse who served with the American expeditionary force overseas in the First World War.

EDMONTON—B.C. Highway Minister Gagliardi was presented with a wallet containing traffic tickets. Mr.

Gagliardi is heading a B.C. tourist promotion group on a visit to Alberta. The presentation was made by Edmonton Mayor Elmer Roper. Mayor Roper was presented with a miniature Victoria cluster light lamp post and a Cowichan Indian sweater.

LONDON—The weekly magazine Time and Tide says Mao Tse-tung, 70, leader of the Communist Party in China, has an incurable disease and will retire before the end of this year.

VANCOUVER—Ambrey Peck, president of the art gallery here, says treasures worth $250,000 are left lying on the floor of the gallery basement, simply because there is not enough room to hang them.

SEATTLE—Gethy Horn, who was given a $6,000 indemnity by the last state legislature for having been "unjustly imprisoned" for 24 years, was back in court on a begging charge. "My old age assistance cheque didn't come on time," the 68-year-old Negro said.

VANCOUVER—Thieves have made off with a brass plaque from the statue near city hall of Captain George Vancouver, Gordon.

Birmingham Uneasy

Officials Scoff at Race Pact

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP)—An uneasy quiet reigned in Birmingham Saturday as Negro leaders mapped plans for a voter registration drive on the heels of a truce in the racial crisis.

Behind the scenes Negroes said they were moving from house to house in an effort to hasten renewed efforts toward voter registration.

Despite settlement — on the surface — of issues in this city's six-week racial crisis, more than 500 Alabama highway patrolmen still patrolled streets. Department of conservation agents remained on standby. Police and sheriff's deputies were jammed into Negro areas. City officials said Alabama had a biracial citizens' committee agreement on proposals to end the conflict, in which more than 2,000 Negroes were arrested and fire hoses and police dogs brought into play to control seething throngs of Negro demonstrators.

Staunch segregationist police commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor, who directed the arrests and repulsed the crowds, said the agreement was "the liveliest face-saving statement that ever was issued."

"We've licked them and licked them good," he declared.

Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. said the agreement provides:

1. Desegregation of lunch counters, rest rooms, sitting rooms, and drinking fountains in planned stages within the next 90 days.

2. The upgrading and hiring of Negroes on a non-discriminatory basis, including the hiring of Negroes as clerks and salesmen within the next 60 days.
3. Arrangements for the release of all persons arrested during racial demonstrations on bond or personal recognizance.
4. Communications between Negroes and white persons to be reestablished within the next two weeks.

The agreement has no official status.

MARRHAM, England (Reuters)—Police and RAF security officers today clashed with a group of "hoo-bombers" who tried to claim an air base here after buying it lock, stock and missiles at a mock auction.

Before the demonstrators gave up and went to a local tavern, about a dozen of them were arrested.

The clash came after the group led by the anti-nuclear "committee of 100" held their auction in the nearby quiet market town of Swaffham.

Tariffs Off By 1966

LISBON (Reuters)—The ministerial council of the seven-nation European Free Trade Association announced its agreement to eliminate industrial tariffs by the end of 1966.

A communique at the end of a three-day meeting here said the ministers decided to form "a final timetable for the dismantling of tariffs on industrial products."

NEW YORK—Fifteen-year-old Vincent Avramand has been held in $10,000 bail in connection with the death of a private-detective agency sergeant who died under the wheels of a Brooklyn subway train.

OTTAWA—A change in government pay policy that would benefit federal employees who lose out on future retroactive pay increases because of retirement was announced by Finance Minister Walter Gordon.

Machetes on Ban List During Kenya Election

NAIROBI (Reuters)—Clubs, sticks, knives and machetes—the grisly weapons of the Mau Mau rebellion — have been banned for the duration of this month's general elections in Kenya.

Anyone found in possession of one of these weapons is liable to two years in prison, a $500 fine, or both.

Some 2,500,000 Kenyans, most of them Negroes, will vote May 18 - 26.

The Need Is Here

IS IT NOT an odd commentary on the Canadian character that while the majority of us respond generously to various appeals made through our churches, universities, service clubs and other societies and organizations to help financially in such causes as the education of the backward native of Africa or the social advancement of the Negro in Arkansas, we spare hardly a thought or a penny toward improving the lot of our own original Canadian, the Red Indian?

During the past few years Canadian universities and churches of all denominations have not only sent a good many dollars abroad but sponsored large numbers of undergraduates in trips to Africa, Asia and South America to educate and instruct the inhabitants of those areas toward a better way of life.

There is no denying that these efforts are laudable and a credit to all Canadians who support or take part in such programs. But should we not apply the same sort of generosity to our own people as well?

It may well be that this is already being done. But if it is, it remains a dark secret as far as most Canadians are concerned.

Why do we know so little about our Canadian Indians? Why are so few of them given the opportunity of higher education in their own country? Why are there only a handful of Indians in the professions, in the civil service, or in the commercial and industrial life of Canada? Are they leading a good and full life? Or are they getting a shabby deal in this large and wealthy country of ours?

These are but some of the questions which need answering. Surely those of us who live whatever life we choose in Canada should not remain content to leave our own personal responsibility toward our Indian fellow countrymen solely in the hands of government and church mission agencies.

To most white Canadians the Indian remains even more remote and unknown than the Wakamba tribesman of Kenya. And, by and large, we as a society do even less for him.

Would it be out of line to suggest that in any future Canadian Peace Corps type of operations those involved might find that our Indians and their environs provide just as verdant and perhaps even more rewarding fields for exploration than do the slopes of Kilimanjaro and the road to Mandalay?

We're Normal

THE PEOPLE of the southern end of Vancouver Island, whatever superiorities they may imagine for themselves in other ways, are just about average Canadians when it comes to voting. That is the lesson from the latest statistics on the April 8 federal election, which show that ballots were cast by 80 per cent of the 9,875,473 persons eligible to vote.

The electors of Esquimalt-Saanich constituency were almost startlingly uniform with the national performance in this respect. The percentage there was 80.3, according to calculation at the time. And in the Victoria riding it was 78.62, certainly not far off.

So we're normal. But this assurance of conformity renders no less perplexing another question about election behavior: Why do normal Canadians turn out at 80 per cent of full strength for the national voting, and as a rule only about 35 per cent strong to choose their local governments, to exercise their rights in the supposed grass-roots of democracy?

Phenomenal Record

THE ALBERTA government will go to the polls next month in a general election, and there is nothing to suggest that it won't be returned to office. The record there is phenomenal.

Premier Manning himself will see this month complete 20 continuous years as head of the administration, a tenure which followed straight on from the eight years of the late Mr. Aberhart's premiership.

Normally, or at least in most other areas, 28 years of the same party rule would be much more than enough for the electorate, but obviously Albertans consider they have been well served by the Manning administration.

The Liberal leader in the neighboring province says that the future of democratic government is at stake in the forthcoming Alberta election. So long as elections are held every four or five years the democratic choice is not in danger, but in the sense of too overwhelming a parliamentary majority he has cause for reservations. A mere four opposition members is inadequate safeguard against too one-sided ministerial rule.

Yet Albertans at their last general election in 1959 elected 61 Social Credit members out of a total of 63, so that apparently they felt no unease in this respect even after so many years of Social government. This confidence is a reflection of the Manning administration itself and not the party label.

No great issue presently lies before the Alberta voters, and while in the nature of things Social rule must come to an end sometime it does not seem likely next month. An upset equivalent to that which put Mr. Aberhart in office 28 years ago would have to happen, and there is no visible sign of such in the offing.

As for Mr. Manning, another term in office and he will have been a premier for longer than any other person in the history of the Commonwealth.

Not Cricket

ONE NEVER feels too sympathetic for the other side in a cold war, but...

They've mounted loudspeakers which will jet sound and fury far over the border into East German territory. No less than five miles distant will the music and propaganda carry from these raucous devices.

With our own less expensive experience of these diabolical instruments this seems to be going too far. It is scarcely cricket. Not even a nuclear barrage, perhaps, could stun East Germans more.

This should reduce them to limp rats. After which possibly the loudspeakers could be directed full force at the Berlin wall.

Thinking Aloud

"... of shoes, and ships, and sealing wax..."
By TOM TAYLOR

WRITING as a "nationalist" in his syndicated column an Ottawa press gallery man deplores the "Right Honourable" caption which now distinguishes Mr. Pearson.

He doesn't like a Canadian prime minister being addressed in Canada by a "foreign title." If as a monarchial nation this country's Queen bestows this honor on the head of her Canadian government it's not precisely a foreign title, I should think. If it is and this is objectionable then all kinds of Canadian official nomenclature will have to be excoriated, including that of "Parliament" which Mr. Gerald Waring reports from above the Speaker's head.

The Speaker himself, semantically, thus sits in "foreign" clothing. I doubt Mr. Pearson would agree with Mr. Waring. Nor is his titular elevation unearned.

This is the point the Ottawa press man makes when comparing the prime minister's previous title of "Honorable" with his new style of "Right Honourable." The former may be likened to an earned university doctorate, he says, and the latter to an honorary degree bestowed because a college wants a "name" speaker at its convocation.

Rather an unflattering description of honorary academic degrees.

And neither logical nor correct in its context. As a Right Honourable Mr. Pearson will have as his British fellows personages who earned their title in precisely the same way as Mr. Pearson earned his. The former term of "Honorable" by judicial services to their country.

Mr. Waring is wrong also in believing that Mr. Pearson was appointed to "HM Privy Council for Britain." He was appointed to Her Majesty's Imperial Privy Council, a much wider group of advisers upon whom the Queen may call in connection with her separate realms. Nor will she need the permission of Mr. Macmillan before consulting her Canadian prime minister, or vice versa.

Mr. Waring seems to be letting his feelings run away with him. As for example his reference to "conservation of a shrinking empire and head of a shaky commonwealth"—and "the dominions beyond the seas—or what is left of them."

But if he objects to "Right Honourable" he must in all conscience object to "Honorable" itself. This term is an importation from Britain too, long come by and now inherent in the Canadian scene but deriving from British custom and usage.

For that matter there have been Canadian "Right Honourables" amongst us for the past 80 years. Mr. Waring's "nationalism" apparently has been but lately stirred. And it is flowering in somewhat petty fashion.

He should ask Mr. Pearson what he thinks of the "empty but impressive 'Rt. Hon.' and the less impressive but vastly more meaningful 'Hon.' His mere query, I imagine, would arouse the prime minister.

Especially coming from one who might be expected to be familiar with all these nuances of custom and tradition.

Finally, Mr. Waring says that if we need "more prestigious" titles for our PMs we should cook up some of our own. A splendid idea; he should start on it right away himself. But if he runs the gamut of all the British usages we follow, and which he seems to despise, he is in for a mighty big job.

Any true gardener regards all these items separately as a small part of his own garden. No self-respecting rat could find any food or shelter in a clean pile of stones, a small pile of wood ash or the growing pile of well-trimmed wet compost.

Few More Monstrous

FOR a thousand people who know the title of Spengler's book, "The Decline of the West," perhaps half a dozen have read it. I doubt whether even one of these perished with it from cover to cover.

Yet because of its title and because of its reputation, it holds a most important place in the attitude of contemporary men and women toward the past. Unread, it is known to contain the truth.

Even before the First World War this obscure Austrian, Oswald Spengler, thought that he had discovered the way the world was going. And he knew the way it was going because he had solved some of the major problems of man's history. He demonstrated that the history of mankind is a collection of cultures, or rather, "the drama of a number of mighty cultures, each springing from the soil of a mother region to which it remains firmly bound throughout its whole life cycle; each stamping its material, mankind, with its own image; each having its own life, will and feeling, its own expression which arises, ripens, decays and never returns."

Societies of men are subject, like men themselves, to the same biological cycle of birth, growth, senility and death. And this, according to Spengler, fits the broad truths of human history. Sumer, Akkad, Egypt, Athens, Rome blossomed, withered and all but disappeared. Nor was this a European phenomenon only—the Incas and Aztecs, Easter Island, Ankor; lost worlds everywhere abounded.

He prognosticated in 1928 that there would be the rise of a new Caesarism (with Mussolini on the stage, Hitler in the wings and Stalin conducting his own overture, this was not too difficult to discern). This new Caesarism would smash capitalism and its lackey democracy and there would be a triumph of "race quality, the triumph of the will."

Spengler's crass mistakes are too obvious for a prolonged refutation. The West, the old capitalist West of Spengler, has not only economically but culturally grown, particularly in those aspects of culture which Spengler thought were played out—science and mathematics.

"It remains now," he wrote, "to sketch the last stage of Western science. From our standpoint of today (1917), the gently sloping truth of decline is clearly visible."

Spengler's book is full of spectacular intellectualism of this kind. Perhaps the most glaring arises from his investigation of the Russian soul, the form of which has been revealed, of course, by Russia's history.

Spengler decided that the key to the Russian soul was the fact that "the Russian looks horizontally into the broad plain." And so the Russian became identical with it; his spirit, his culture is horizontal. And so Spengler exclaims, "The idea of a Russian being an astronomer! He does not see the stars at all, he sees only the horizon." Well, well!

As well as infidelities, there were, of course, monstrous howlers of the type that we have grown more used to since Toynbee became a historical prophet; at least, it is charitable to call them howlers.

Spengler ignored, suppressed or distorted evidence that did not fit his emotion-battered attempt at logic. His rhetoric washed away professional difficulties and flowed over and around all awkward fact.

Impossible almost to read, he was nevertheless wonderfully apt for a quotation, and, of course, the implication of his title fitted the mood of the Western intelligentsia, many of whom hated the world in which they lived.

So Spengler was discussed in the 1930s and 1930s, argued about and considered very seriously. His name occurs in all discussion of history and its philosophy. Unread, his ideas were absorbed into the West's consciousness of itself; his enormous blunder became for many an unconscious assumption. The thousands who never read him believed that he proved the decay of the world.

Brilliant Event

From Colonist Film

A WACO aircraft was due to arrive from the factory to put Victoria "back on the air map" 50 years ago.

The plane, with a Boeing flying boat as a substitute if needed and otherwise available for charters, was to enter regular service almost immediately between Esquimalt Harbor and Sea Island.

The first club man of the Victoria Automobile Association for the season was to be to Rooke Harbor Hotel, 50 years ago.

"The distance from the Parliament Buildings is about 23 miles, and the run will be made rain or shine. Cars will leave Victoria when they please. Leaving town at 12 o'clock will allow ample time." Lunch was to be served at 2 p.m. sharp.

New models of the Peerless automobiles were advertised in the Colonist as representing "the taking of the last step to the limit of human knowledge and skill as applied to motor-car construction."

Their characteristics included "heat treatment of every vital steel part; irreversible steering gear; electric starting and lighting; perfect weight balance; internal flexibility; safety, comfort and beauty." The seven-passenger touring car illustrated cost $6,700.

The bachelors of Victoria gave a ball for the Married Ladies' Club in the Amersley Rooms on Fort Street, 75 years ago.

"One of the pleasantest social club events of the season was the return ball given to the... club last evening by the bachelors who had been their guests during the winter season..."

"In the gaitlet the beautifully costumed and lovely forms of the ladies, and the smart garments of the gentlemen, formed a brilliant picture."

Prompt payment of compensation to the Indians for land taken away from them was called for by the Colonist in an editorial 100 years ago.

"Whilst on all sides at present there prevails an earnest desire to see the strong arm of the law prevail upon the savage wretches who have given vent to their blood-thirsty instincts in the murder of so many of our white population along the coast north of this, very little stress is placed upon the necessity of giving the Indians no cause for entertaining ill feelings against the whites..." When they do wrong, let them be immediately sought out and punished; but let us give them no excuse for trespassing."

With the Classics

Sweet was the sound, when oft at evening's close Up yonder hill the village murmur rose;

There, as I paced with careless steps and slow, The mingling notes came softened from below;

The swain responsive as the milkmaid sung, The sober herd that lowed to meet their young,

The noisy geese that gabbled o'er the pool, The playful children just let loose from school,

The watch-dog's voice that bayed the whispering wind, And the low laugh that spoke the vacant mind.

Hon. Lucien Cardin

By GORDON DEWAR (First article in a series of sketches introducing the members of Canada's new government.)

A NEW outlook on the part of associate defence minister has been brought to that office by Lucien Cardin, 44-year-old lawyer representing the Quebec riding of Richelieu-Verchères.

To him the office is no rubber-stamp position. "By order-in-council," he points out, "this position is given exactly the same responsibility and authority as that of the minister of defence."

The idea of two ministers for the large department, which spends a quarter of the government's money, was originated during the Second World War. Subsequent and present circumstances make it clear that the department still requires two ministers to keep it going smoothly, states Mr. Cardin.

In effect, he intends to fully play the role of minister in both the practical operations and policy decisions of the department.

One of the youngest ministers in the new cabinet, Mr. Cardin was born with dual U.S.-Canadian citizenship in Rhode Island.

His French-Canadian father moved back to Sorel, Que.

He was not happy in opposition, since he could not criticize what he did not feel was wrong—and he honestly states that not all was wrong with the late Conservative government.

Mr. Cardin strongly feels the relationship in modern Canada of defence and external affairs policies, thus feels that his training under Mr. Pearson was good training for his present job.

He expects to work with Defence Minister Diefenbaker on an even basis and has some firm ideas about Canada's position in the modern world, NATO and NORAD, where he feels the country should express itself with the true strength it has.

Transportation System In U.S. 'Sick with Cancer'

By BOGER LANE
from New York

The U.S. transportation system is in bad trouble. Commerce Secretary Rogers said recently the system "is sick with cancer" and President Kennedy has urged a prompt cure before U.S. strength is imperilled.

Wrangling over his prescriptions may erupt in Congress soon, and the outcome could affect millions who ride planes, buses and trains.

And millions more who manage, operate and support the United States' huge fleets of trucks, freight trains, aircraft, ships, barges and its big network of pipelines.

It will influence prices of everything from bobby pins to automobiles and houses, since a penny of every dime a consumer spends goes for transportation.

At the heart of the problem is the long-suffering $27,000,000,000 railroad industry.

The issue is what to do about lopsided ground rules on regulation of freight rates, the bread and butter of all transportation companies except airlines.

The president wants de-regulation, freeing of railroads from government curbs on minimum rates applying to 70 per cent of their freight traffic. No other form of transportation has comparable restrictions.

Kennedy also has urged mass transit subsidies and equalization of tax burdens, now heaviest by far on railroads.

Altogether, 34 of the 103 major U.S. railroads lost $78,000,000 last year despite overall industry earnings of $371,000,000. The same number ran $142,000,000 in the red in 1961 when the industry's return on investment fell below two per cent and hit a 15-year bottom.

The airlines, jolted by heavy losses in 1961 and a break-even in 1962, and the merchant marine are other trouble spots in transport.

Ralph E. Casey, president of the American Merchant Marine Institute, blames high costs, especially of labor, and what he calls misguided government policies, for a precipitous decline in the U.S. shipping industry.

In the last 10 years, the share of seaborne U.S. commerce with other countries carried in U.S. flag ships dropped to about 10 per cent from 43 per cent.

Casey says "extermination" of American coastal shipping has become a "visible possibility."

Battle Royal Shapes Up

By TERRY HAMMOND

The most fascinating political battle in British Columbia's recent history is shaping up in the Kamloops constituency where staid, dignified Conservative Fulton will mount a white charger in a bid to slay the Social Credit dragon as personified by ebullient Highways Minister Philip Arthur Gagliardi.

Even with the date of B.C.'s next election still anybody's guess, it is safe to say that the results of this contest will at least share top billing with the province-wide outcome and could be the top story if the Social Credit simply get another mandate.

No Hollywood casting director could have chosen two more likely combatants for a dramatic duel between the old order and the new, the traditional and the tempestuous, the brilliant and the brash, the professional and the prodigal.

No individual on the B.C. political scene today so coincides with the image of the old line parties, steeped in history and tradition, as Mr. Fulton.

And no other individual so well personifies the attributes

FULTON
... professional

CAPITAL REPORT

of Social Credit, its newness, its opportunism, its aggressiveness, and its accomplishments as the highways minister.

For the opportunity to observe this delightful tournament when it comes along, we must thank Mr. Fulton.

In his decision to stand in his native Kamloops in the heart of Social Credit territory the new B.C. Tory leader has shown accurate appreciation of the task which lies before him in reorganizing his moribund party.

What the B.C. Conservative Party has lacked since the twilight of the coalition government is stature.

Mr. Fulton can achieve that stature by winning Kamloops. In fact it is quite possible that he can achieve it just by trying to win Kamloops, and barely possible that he would come closer to achieving it by being beaten in Kamloops than by being victorious in it, say, Victoria.

Some observers consider it quite likely that these three ingredients can bring success without the obviously desirable and somewhat remote fourth one: a general disenchantment with Social Credit.

Which brings us to the second question. Is it likely that as Kamloops goes so goes the province?

No.

The primary political contest in B.C. today is still that between Social Credit and the NDP.

A Fulton win in Kamloops could be an important ingredient to the defeat of the government and little else.

Undoubtedly it would be a bright spark for a bushfire Tory resurgence, but resurgence and victory are probably the best part of 10 years apart.

BACKGROUND

Alan Paton Persecuted

By STANLEY HURST
From Johannesburg

Alan Paton, author of Cry the Beloved Country, and leader of the South African Liberal Party, is the prime target in an all-out government campaign of vilification.

Paton has already had his passport confiscated to prevent him speaking abroad against Dr. Verwoerd's Nationalist Government.

Now, as a preliminary to further action, the South African White is being given, by propaganda, a fake picture of Alan Paton.

The famous author, a bespectacled, pernickety little man with the confused manner of a timid, elderly clerk, is being pictured as a dangerous man. The Afrikaans Press (almost wholly controlled by Premier Verwoerd) spills out a stream of vilification against "the Liberals" whose credo is that all men are born equal. Liberalism is equated with Communism and is made a dirty word in the ears of all "right-thinking" whites.

Minister of Justice Vorster has restricted the activities of Paton and his lieutenants—under the "Suppression of Communism Act."

Picture Distorted

His opinion is final. There is no recourse to the courts.

Thus the picture of Paton held up to a public already alarmed by events in the Congo, Kenya, and the disrupted Rhodesian Federation is that of a renegade white plotter hand in hand with barbaric black men scheming to overthrow good government.

The volume of near-hysterical abuse has apparently no appeal. Paton feels he has been unable to steel himself to say a word in his defence in words.

His latest play, Sponono, has indicated his thoughts. It is based on his experiences as head of the country's most progressive and successful reformatory for black youths before the fame of authorship touched him.

His final scene shows Paton himself behind bars on one side of the stage and African youths in a cell on the other. They stretch out their hands through the bars.

Camera Peeks Into Tummy

TOKYO (Reuters) — A Japanese optical firm has designed a new "gastro-camera" for photographing the inside of your stomach.

Spokesmen for the firm said none of the conventional cameras of the "gastro" type can be focused at will from the "outside," so doctors have to be content with "blind photographing."

The existing tiny "gastro cameras," equipped with a long tube, is swallowed by the patient. Doctors have to turn the films and operate the shutter through a tube, from the outside.

'Favored' Drug Addicts

Ten per cent of the drug addicts in Canada are professional people, and three-quarters of these are in the medical profession, according to R. C. Hammond, chief of the narcotic control division of the federal health and welfare department.

Speaking at Kingston, Ont., he said that few professionals are prosecuted for possessing narcotics. If any prosecution results, it is usually a charge of falsifying or obtaining a prescription illegally. Mr. Hammond said.

He estimated that two-thirds of Canada's 3,500 drug addicts live in Vancouver, with Toronto and Montreal the next largest centres for addiction.

'Lakes' Issue Still Clouded

By IAN STREET

Events of the past few days have shed little new light on the future status of the city's considerable property holdings at Elk-Beaver Lake.

First, the city announced that it valued the property at more than $3,200,000, having arrived at this figure by subdividing it on paper into some 1,800 residential lots and taking their present market value.

The figure came as a shock, even to those at city hall. Previous estimates, by methods ranging from pure guesswork to meticulous calculation of compound interest on the city's investment, ranged from the ridiculously low figure of $50,000 to $1,000,000 or more.

The Sanich reaction, if we can judge by the remarks of some of the more vocal councillors, was one of immediate and bitter opposition. It was a wonderful opportunity to portray Victoria in the role of an ogre, ready to gobble up the Sanich peninsula.

For this the city must take part of the blame. While the city fathers stoutly maintain that it was their duty to Victoria taxpayers to determine the commercial value of the land, several vital points were not made sufficiently clear.

● Victoria does NOT intend, under any circumstances, to subdivide its property holdings in this area in any manner that would apportion Elk-Beaver Lake as a recreational centre.

● The $3,000,000 price tag is NOT the figure it expects to receive for the property, either from Sanich or Greater Victoria water district, but rather a starting point for negotiations.

These purchase negotiations, in any event, are unlikely to encompass the entire 700-acre property.

Undoubtedly, the city would as a first choice sell all its Elk-Beaver Lake holdings. It feels, and rightly so, that the park is enjoyed by the entire community and should be supported by everyone. But it also recognizes that there is little chance of achieving this aim.

There also appears to be nothing to give credence to the repeated suggestions from outside sources that the city would use its controlling vote on the water district board to force such a sale.

Indeed, if it elected to do so, there's every reason to believe that provincial authorities would step in.

A possible solution lies in negotiations with both Sanich and the water district. Sanich could then purchase, if it wished, the mainly open section to the east of the Patricia Bay Highway, near the entrance to Beaver Lake, for use as playing fields or a golf course.

Victoria would, by agreement with Sanich, reserve certain carefully-selected areas, remote from those now used for recreation, to be subdivided and ultimately used for residential development.

The 25 acres of city land west of the highway, used as a revolver range, is perhaps the most easily adapted to residential use without infringement upon the parkland.

Others could be the south-eastern section beyond the old V. and S. railway right-of-way, so remote that most people don't know it is part of the lake property, and at the northeastern end of the lake.

The actual lake shoreline and surrounding treed parkland could be sold to the water district and so preserved for all time as a recreational area.

Since payment for the lake purchase would be based on water usage, with the cost adding a few pennies to every water bill, Sanich would be unwise to object.

The municipality now pays only 27.6 per cent of the total; Oak Bay pays 11.9 per cent. Victoria and Esquimalt, which share a single water distribution system, pay a total of 80.5 per cent.

For the rest of the city's "outside" parks, Thetis Lake, Duran Lake, and Gorge-Tillam, which boost the total estimated value to $5,270,000, there appears little likelihood of any change in status in the foreseeable future.

Trading Stamps Reward For Churchgoers

By ERNEST MARSHALL MOWBE

A church in Florida, according to a recent news item is now giving Green Stamps for attendance at the Sunday services.

The ironic report which I read in an American publication, provided no details of the plan's operation. But it did raise some interesting questions, and make some provocative comments.

The report questioned, for example, how much the church would match the equity of the supermarket's plan in giving so many green stamps for so much merchandise. Would stamps be proportioned to the size of the individual's offering? Or so many stamps for so many minutes of worship? There are enormous possibilities when all denominations really get the green stamp system in full swing. The spiritual benefits of public worship will be augmented by material benefits.

The faithful attendant at church all winter will be able, when he goes away on holidays, to stop in at the church office and collect a nice new canoe, or an outdoor motor. With such a system would anyone really doubt that religion pays?

Bribes Nothing New

We must recognize, however, while Green Stamps are a new gimmick, in particular harmony with the current patterns of our affluent society, they are not as original as may seem. I myself can recall that many years ago, in the depression days in Winnipeg, a downtown United Church offered a free orange to everyone who attended the evening service.

Some years ago the president of the American Bar Association made a speech to an important law school. Then he undertook to give the young students some practical advice which they would not get from their professors.

A Racket! That's It!

The "church racket" is a national institution. It is precisely the thing upon which many churches have built the illusion of their influence. Going to church is part of getting along in society, in a quiet, genteel way.

In the dim past of our primitive ancestors religion was often little more than fertility rights. Oblation was paid to God because in turn God then would provide the harvest. Religion was a device for getting the wherewithal to live.

We have passed our ancestors

Times, his counsel included the following:

"The most important thing about law is getting business. . . . Go to church even if it is hard to take. You will meet a lot of nice people there. It isn't so important for you to see them, as for them to see you. Now that is called the church racket, but what of it, as long as you are getting business in a quiet, genteel way."

The church racket! That's it! And when the president of a bar association tells a graduating class of law students they should learn how to work the "church racket" he is not advising something that has been confined to a particular law school or a particular profession.

In many ways, but sometimes modern religion seems not much more than refined techniques of the fertility cult—more sophisticated devices for investing a measure of worship with the anticipation of receiving corresponding dividends in groceries, or luxuries.

I have heard no report as to the success of the Green Stamp congregation. But even if it had queues every Sunday morning, not to mention additional queues every Sunday evening, I would not regard it as a profound token of genuine spiritual revival in the modern world.

Brains Like It People Hate It

By JOHN CROSSY

One of the great conversation pieces of France at the moment is Les Abysses, the controversial movie which has been selected to represent France at the film festival at Cannes.

Outside Le Rainou on the Champs-Elysees, where it's playing, are posted raves from the intellectuals, such as Jean Genet, Jean-Paul Sartre, Francois Sagan, Simone de Beauvoir ("One of the greatest films I have ever seen.")

The other day France-Soir polled a few ordinary moviegoers to find out what they thought, and got such responses as: "I want my money back," "Scandalous," "Unworthy," "Shameful," and "Pourquoi?" (which may be my favorite movie review of all time.)

Les Abysses is taken from a true story, the tale of a couple of demented sisters, who were servants to an avaricious and impoverished farmer who hadn't paid them for three years.

The two sisters, who are strikingly, almost sadistically, played by a couple of real sisters—Collette and Francine Berge—are insanely attached to the farmer's house largely because they have no place else to go. The farmer and his new wife want to sell it.

Most of the film is devoted to the sister's loopy attempts to thwart a sale. They poke holes in the furniture, they smash up the crockery in the kitchen. They tell a prospective buyer that the house is infested with termites.

But nothing works. The sale goes through. One of the most striking and pitiable sights of the film is that of the two sisters—stained, filthy, but wearing the hallmarks of their servitude, the typical white lace aprons—preparing to serve tea to the new purchasers of the house, their faces a mask of grief because they are now homeless.

Then, in a final paroxysm of violence, the sisters murder the wife and the farmer's daughter and the picture draws to a close as the new buyers and the farmer stare silently at the bodies.

Everything is in that final state of horror an indictment of the farmer for his treatment of the sisters, an indictment of society itself, since this condition was by no means unique to the Papin sisters. Also, curiously, it was one of those rare moments in drama when one gets the feeling that it is both everybody's fault, and nobody's fault, that a concentration of circumstances had come together which simply made these events inevitable and nothing could stop them.

The film's strongest point is a sort of sustained violence of feeling that I found tremendously moving, exasperating, and gripping.

The Berge sisters act with an old-fashioned grandiloquence—throwing themselves on their knees, bawling, snarling, spitting—the like of which I haven't seen since silent pictures. Somehow it works.

It is essentially a portrait of malevolent hatred. But through it all, purifying it and humanizing it and adding a whole new dimension, is the great love, almost abnormal in its intensity, of the two sisters for each other.

Some critics have read a Lesbian significance into this. But I feel strongly that the two sisters had no one but each other to love and they clung and caressed and clung to one another because they had nothing else. This is deeply touching.

The film was made for peanuts. Papatakis, who is a well-known and liked Parisian playboy who owns a nightclub, dug into his own pocket for $14,000, borrowed $80,000 from a French millionaire, and got another $0 grand from Richard Quine, the Hollywood director, and George Axelrod, the playwright and screen writer.

I find it vastly encouraging that this sort of thing can take place at all. A fellow has an idea. Borrows a couple of bucks. The film is made. It shocks a lot of people. It thrills others.

It outrages the Old Guard. (The established film producers in France are up in arms.) It is selected to represent France at a film festival. It's a Cinderella story of the film industry and so long as such a thing can take place the industry will retain its youth, its vitality, its freshness, its romance.

BOB HOPE... more of him

Time for Change

Busier Hope Faces A New Dimension

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—"I look at it this way," said Bob Hope over a 3:30 p.m. breakfast of bacon, toast and marmalade.

"I've been on television for 13 years doing the same thing. It's time I had a change."

AN ANTHOLOGY

He was talking about his reasons for undertaking a weekly Bob Hope Show next season—six of his regular variety shows, two "book" shows (musicals or comedies with plot) and the rest an anthology which he would host.

During his 13 years of special, Hope has been defeated in the ratings only once—this season by the upstart Beverly Hillsbillies. So why would he want to venture into the weekly rat race?

The answer would seem to be connected with Hope's fondness for cash.

WANTS CHALLENGE

"No, it doesn't make that much difference," he said. "I'm doing it mainly for myself—to give me a new challenge, a new dimension. It puts me into a different field, and I think I can do some good there."

"I'm really serious about getting some shows of quality in the anthologies we're going to do. There is a lot of talent around and I want to use it. Since this will be the Bob Hope Show, I want it to be good."

APPROACH PROBLEM

He is wrestling with approaches to his hosting duties. Since he will be introducing serious dramas some weeks, it wouldn't do for him to come on with the usual Hopian monologue.

"A lot of my introductions will be straight," he said. "The way Dick Powell did it was about the best it has been done."

The songbird had returned to the NBC studios for her last hours of work before her announced retirement from television.

Her final show, which will appear tonight, had been taped. All that remained were some commercials.

"This is it. I've already wept buckets, so I won't do that again. And I'll be back. There's no telling how soon."

There was good reason for her sentiment: A good slice of her life has been spent in the precincts of NBC. Her television career started in 1951 with her 15-minute show. Some 444 telecasts later, she launched into a weekly hour. The hours lasted seven years.

Before television there were movies, radio, records and so on dating back to her debut as a singer in 1931.

He Faces Space Quietly

By CHARLES STAFFORD

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP)—Astronaut Gordon Cooper concentrated on his backwork and muscle tone Saturday as preparations moved smoothly ahead for his scheduled departure Tuesday on the United States' most extensive man-in-space adventure.

The spaceport was calm, unusually so this close to launch time.

NO PANIC

An official of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said he couldn't recall a pre-flight weekend when there was so little excitement among those connected with the project.

"There's no panic, no last-minute fire drills," he said.

22 ORBITS

If no hitch develops, Cooper will be lifted into space sometime between 8 a.m. and 8:30 a.m. PDT Tuesday. His Faith 7 space vehicle will be shoved into a 17,500-mile-an-hour orbit 100 to 170 miles above the earth. His planned mission will cover 22 orbits, or nearly 800,000 miles in 24 hours.

The 38-year-old Air Force major received an hour-long briefing Saturday morning from engineers on their constant checks of the 300,000 parts that make up the eight-storey Atlas rocket that will power Faith 7 aloft.

Then he went into a two-hour item-by-item review of his mission.

After lunch he was free for the day. Cooper did some exercises and relaxed in the crew quarters in famed Hangar 5, the same quarters occupied by the previous five astronauts in the last days before their space flights.

Cooper's equipment, Faith 7 and Atlas 130D, were reported in tip-top condition. The astronaut made a make-believe flight Friday, donning his space suit and climbing into the conical couch of Faith 7.

"There were no problems," a NASA spokesman said. "We had an excellent simulation."

Officials will hold their first weather briefing Sunday. The Weather Bureau said that with the exception of a small Pacific storm, there was little weather to worry about.

TRIPLE EXPERIENCE

Cooper's mission, the fourth U.S. orbital flight in a program designed to place an American on the moon in this decade, will almost triple the nation's man-in-space experience if it goes the full 22 orbits.

Two Soviet cosmonauts stayed up for 64 and 48 orbits last August.

MEDICAL STUDIES
Major objective of the Cooper flight is to study the effects of prolonged weightlessness on man's efficiency as a space pilot. Several experiments will be performed by the astronaut, with medical studies receiving top priority.

Cooper will be the first American to attempt to get a good night's sleep in space. An eight-hour sleep period is scheduled between orbits 9 and 15. He will eat several times.

SERIES OF CHECKS

Cooper's water balance and kidney function will be studied. His temperature will be taken periodically with an oral thermometer stored in his helmet. Constant checks will be made of his blood pressure, and electrocardiogram readings of his heart's performance will be relayed to earth.

SECOND SATELLITE

The astronaut will launch his own satellite, a softball-sized flashing beacon light that will be fired from the outside of Faith 7 on a slightly different orbit. As it drifts slowly away, Cooper will estimate its relative position from the spacecraft and describe whether it is easy or difficult to spot. The experiment will help work out rendezvous techniques that will be necessary in later space flights.

TAKE PICTURES
Armed with television, movie and still cameras, Cooper will photograph light phenomena, cloud formations, the stars, and even himself. The special, slow scan television camera will beam pictures of Cooper back to Cape Canaveral as he passes overhead.

Converted to normal television speed at the Cape, some of these pictures will be transmitted for public viewing by the national networks.

If all goes well, Cooper will make a watery landing in the Pacific southeast of Midway Island sometime between 4:19 p.m. and 6:48 p.m., Wednesday.

Archie Plugs For Pool

Archie McKinnon will stand beneath his life-size portrait at the Jaycee Fair Monday to plug for pledges to the $100,000 Archie McKinnon swimming pool fund campaign.

This will be the only chance the public has to view Allan Edwards' painting of the former Y coach and Olympic trainer which was donated to him at the recent Archie McKinnon testimonial dinner.

TO BE STORED

After this public display during the Jaycee Fair Monday through Saturday, the portrait will be stored until the pool opens together with the projected new YM-YWCA building.

The portrait will find its permanent place beside the covered pool.

Archie and his portrait will frame the special Y building fund campaign booth at the Memorial Arena, to be staffed by volunteer helpers under the auspices of the Y women's auxiliary.

DRIVE STARTS

The swimming pool fund drive was kicked off at the testimonial dinner last Wednesday with the pledge by the Victoria Gyrus Club of $1,000—$200 a year over five years.

Pool drive chairman Robert Hutchison last night emphasized the campaign was part of the $1,338,000 over-all Y building objective, not additional.

SHARE HANDS

Victims of the booth might be lucky catching Archie in a shake his hand. At any rate, they can always pick up pledge cards for their contribution to the pool, and literature explaining purpose and layout of the new Y building.

In addition, a sketch of the proposed building and plans will be displayed.

We Export Wealth

Processing Industries 'Vital'

By HARRY YOUNG Colonist Business Editor

Canada has been living for years on the assumption that it had behind it untold raw materials, and that all it had to do was to find a market for its basic products to ensure its economic success.

Many people now doubt this is correct. There is also doubt that Canada's growing population can find itself enough work if most of its exports are raw materials.

Vancouver mining engineer, C. M. Campbell, who hates to see so much of Canada's raw minerals being moved out of the country for processing elsewhere, is afraid that before we realize what we are doing we shall have come to the end of our resources.

Mr. Campbell claims that of 400 mining companies listed on the Toronto Stock Exchange, only 70 pay dividends; in British Columbia only 120 of the province's 1,400 mining operations have ever paid dividends.

He is particularly critical of the B.C. situation.

Thirty years ago, Mr. Campbell says, conditions were ripe for an iron industry based on our iron ore, cooking coal and limestone. Government after government blocked the project.

New federal government is subsidizing B.C. and Alberta coking coal, so that it may be shipped to Japan where it will be used to smelt the iron ore that is being shipped out of B.C. ports as fast as the mining men can get it out of the ground. It is the same with copper ores.

But to Mr. Campbell the crowning insult to Canada could come if Japanese interests decided to finance a copper smelter and refinery in British Columbia.

SHIPYARDS LEAD

The two Victoria shipyards are listed by the B.C. Bureau of Economics and Statistics as the only manufacturing firms in Victoria with more than 500 employees. The only other Vancouver Island firm in this category is Western Forest Industries at Honeycomb Bay on Cowichan Lake.

In all, there are 30 B.C. firms listed with a minimum of 500 employees, and most of them are in the Vancouver metropolitan area.

Moore-Whittington Lumber and Victoria Press Ltd. are the only island firms listed with between 200 and 499 employees.

MORE FOR U.S.

Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company is now making 65 per cent of its crude oil deliveries to refineries in the Puget Sound area of the U.S., says E. C. Hurd, president, in a report on the first three months of 1963.

A year ago, Trans Mountain's exports to the U.S. refineries were 60 per cent, with British Columbia refineries taking 40 per cent.

Based on the company's figures, the B.C. refineries took 74,404 barrels of crude a day in the first three months of this year while the U.S. refineries took 128,195. A year ago the B.C. refineries took 81,260 barrels and the U.S. took 124,600.

As Union Oil of California is now making application to the U.S. power commission to allow resumption of waterborne crude oil imports into the Puget Sound area, it is possible the threat is partly responsible for the heavy volume of trading in Trans Mountain shares in recent days.

During that period Trans Mountain shares have weakened from 84 1/2% to 81 1/4%, at a time when most other oil pipelines have been booming.

If it were not for the uncertainty of its U.S. business, there can be little doubt Trans Mountain shares would be more highly valued on the stock market. On their present dividend rate of $1 a year, the yield on the shares is over 8 per cent.

The Car Corner

Police Cars Hot Potato

By J. T. JONES

Vancouver's police say they're tired of being left standing with cars on their faces when they try to chase down hot rods and sport cars. They want more power in their patrol cars.

Police Chief Ralph Booth has recommended the force buy 39 new cars with big V-8 engines and various speed equipment. The issue comes up before Vancouver council Tuesday.

When it does, I hope they'll consider one or two points that the chief may not have set down.

First, is it wise to set up the police force for races through city streets against lead-footed youths? Granted, all that's needed is to get close enough to get the licence number, but can they be sure they'll settle for that?

After all, two cars blasting are a good deal more dangerous to bystanders than one car doing 50 or 60.

Second, will these police cars be properly set up to make use of the extra power? There are suspension and brake modifications available—and they and the hot engines together are often called "police kits"—and these big cars need them for the kind of hard driving that seems to be expected.

Third, just what kind of sports cars and hot rods do the police think they might be taking on? There are more than a few in Vancouver that the hottest police special couldn't stay with for five blocks. 160-mile-an-hour machinery.

Race Driver Moss Awarded Divorce

LONDON (AP)—Stirling Moss, 33-year-old retired British auto racing driver, won a divorce Saturday from Mrs. Katherine Moss on grounds of desertion.

Canadian-born Mrs. Moss, 27, now lives at Nassau in the Bahamas. She did not contest the action. The couple had no children.

They were married in October, 1937, and separated in 1961. Moss testified his wife made it clear she did not intend to live with him again.

Fortunately, the police force have resources that take away a lot of the need for speed—mainly organization and radio communications. They know—or they ought to know—which fast car belongs to whom, especially if whom happens to be a bad actor. The Victoria area police have this sort of thing pretty well taped, anyway.

They can save a lot of gasoline, rubber and risk just by dropping around to the owner's house and waiting for him.

All this is not to say that there's no place for fast cars on police forces. With well-trained drivers and used correctly, they command a lot of respect from the sports set, which is half the battle.

But worrying about egg on the face isn't a very good sign.

Socred Whip Says He'll Sit As Independent in Commons

QUEBEC (CP)—Social Credit party whip Guy Marroux said Saturday he has resigned from the party and will sit in the House of Commons as an independent Social Credit member.

He said being independent will allow him "more freedom to speak."

Dr. Marroux, a physician from Beauport, near Quebec City, was re-elected member for Quebec-Montmorency.

He said his resignation from the party has been sent to National Leader Robert Thompson and his resignation as an executive member of Le Rassemblement des Creditistes, the party's Quebec wing, to Quebec organizers.

Asked if he still was on good terms with Mr. Thompson, Dr. Marroux said he was. Asked if he were still on good terms with Real Caouette, his Quebec chief, Dr. Marroux said: "I'd rather not say anything."

The resignation was, he said, over a disagreement in caucus last week over the party's handling of the case of six Quebec members who, shortly after the federal election, sent a sworn statement to the governor-general announcing support for the Liberal party. The six later retracted.

Punch-Card Pete Supreme

By JIM TAYLOR
(Alias 4910020149)

I'm leading with a record-of-the-month club. At least, I'd like to, but I can't get past their calculating machine.

It's sitting down there in Don Mills, Ont., laughing at me.

For months now I have waged an infuriating one-way war with this mathematical monster, trying to straighten out my account. The machine is winning, gears down, simply by refusing to let its employers know I exist.

"Here's another letter from good old member 4910020149," it chuckles, cathode tubes blinking merrily. Then there's a clang, whir or rattle, and I'm flipped into the waste basket again.

It's happening to all of us, you know—to every one of us that joins a record or book club, or puts his name on a magazine subscription list. We're immediately at the mercy of Punch-Card Pete, and we'd damn well better stay in our little slot and like it. Because Pete is never going to let us out.

For me, the war started when I trustingly ordered a record, received it, and sent a cheque in payment along with a punch-card refusing the following month's selection.

Pete, who probably works on commission, sent me the second record anyway, and billed me for both. I sent it back with a letter of explanation, along with another punch-card refusing the next record.

You're right, I got No. 3 anyway—along with a note from Pete saying I owed $16.26 for three records.

Now here I made my big mistake. I assumed there were people running the company. There aren't. Punch-Card Pete rules the roost, and don't you forget it.

I wrote a letter. No answer. Just another bill from Pete. I wrote another letter. No answer, but another bill, this time an angry pay-up-or-else type of bill. Pete had shifted into high.

In all I wrote five letters, sneakily addressing the last one to the credit manager and marking it personal to fool Pete. Sneering at my little ploy, he sent another bill warning me the whole matter would be turned over to a collection agency if I didn't cough up.

Pete's system is so simple, it's frightening.

Every member has a punch-card, and if a cheque hasn't arrived on a specified date, Pete burps out letter No. 1. Each month he burps again, and out comes another, nastier, note.

There is simply nothing on Pete's tapes to take in the human element—the chance that some poor, down-trodden little member just might like to see the boss and humbly suggest that Pete has made a mistake.

Most members eventually pay, just to be rid of Pete. But not this time. This time little 4910020149 is going to fight. "Beat Pete" is the rallying cry, and may he choke on my next letter.

Of course, I'll lose, because nobody ever beats Pete. They'll drag me into small-debit court, wheeling Pete in to press charges, and, naturally, the judge will find me guilty, let Pete foreclose on him, too.

Pete himself will pass sentence. There'll be a clank, and a whirring noise that sounds suspiciously like laughter as the final, faithful card drops out of the slot.

"Go to jail. Go directly to jail. Do not pass Go."

Chinese Head Target of Plot

SAIGON (AP)—The Cambodian government said Friday it had uncovered an unsuccessful plot to kill Communist Chinese President Liu Shao-chi and the Cambodian chief of state, Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

The assassination plot was to have involved explosives planted in a tunnel under the highway between Phnom Penh Airport and the capital. The charge was to have been set off as Liu's motorcade passed over it May 1.

"The royal Cambodian government has all the details of plans for assassination made by certain imperialist countries which were to be carried out by terrorists infiltrated from across Cambodia's borders," the announcement said.

LIN SHAO-CHI

Warden 'Freed'

OTTAWA (CP)—The finding that warden Michel LeCorre, 42, and two St. Vincent de Paul prison guards were criminally negligent in the death of a guard-hospital means there is no obligation on the Crown to pay charges, officials said Saturday. That would have occurred had the coroner's jury ruled someone was "criminally responsible" for the death of Raymond Teller, 24.

Around Town

Empress Talks Go On

Nothing was settled in the Empress Hotel strike negotiations Saturday. Victoria conciliation officer W. T. McLaughlin told the Colonist last night.

He said the talks would resume Monday. The union, local 276, Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers, is represented by J. R. Grealy. Lloyd Jacobson, C.P.R. personnel officer, is representing the company.

Three Victoria organizations have been awarded $200 grants by the Leon and Tina Keenier Foundation. It was announced Saturday.

An Art Gallery grant will be used to purchase works of art, a Norfolk House School grant will go toward equipping of science laboratories and a St. Margaret's School grant will be used to develop a reference library.

Mrs. Lillian Williams, 961 Tattersall, picked a tulip stem with four blossoms from her garden last Sunday and suggested her husband bring it in to the Colonist.

A picture of another gardener, holding two tulip stems with three blossoms on each, had appeared the day before. After some rummaging in the compost heap, Mr. Williams dropped into the Colonist last night—with a tulip stem which had once had four blossoms.

A Grade 7 student at St. Ann's Academy, Candler Morgan, 2312 McNeill, has won first prize in a B.C. wide essay contest for students in the elementary grades of Catholic schools.

She wins $25 and a medal and St. Ann's gets a trophy for a year in the contest sponsored by the Simon Fraser branch, Knights of Columbus, for essays on the role of the layman in the church.

A pedestrian suffered a broken left arm Saturday when he was thrown 40 feet by a car as he was crossing Pandora at Cook.

A witness said David Thomas of 1242 Fort was walking south across Pandora after the light had turned red, and was involved in a collision with a car driven west on Pandora by John Renyk of 1319 Fernwood. He was in satisfactory condition in hospital.

Kicking off National Forest Conservation Week with a bang of the hammer is Victoria maple patrol member Brian Clarke, 12, of 4403 Chartwell Drive, Group 108, Junior Forest Wardens. Week starts today and includes Junior Forest Wardens' Week.

Week Begins

Junior Wardens Off To a Flying Start

Saanich Junior Forest Wardens kicked off Forest Conservation Week well Saturday by clearing up 37 campsites in Bamerton Park and battling a brush fire in an adjoining property.

The conservation week actually begins today and runs until Saturday but the Saanich group got an early start, supervisor Mrs. Philip Dawes, 3850 Saanich Road, said last night.

During the week the Saanich group and the Victoria Junior Forest Wardens will combine to staff a special booth at the Jaycee fair, featuring the theme of Youth in Conservation.

Members, ranging from 10 years to 16, will staff the booth afternoons and evenings. Both groups have entered floats in the Victoria Day parade, May 20, on the same theme.

Members, ranging from 10 years to 16, will staff the booth afternoons and evenings. Both groups have entered floats in the Victoria Day parade, May 20, on the same theme.

The Saanich group helped clean up 37 campsites in Bamerton Park yesterday. While they were having lunch on the beach some of the boys saw a fire on a neighboring property was getting out of control and threatening the park property. So they went to work.

Haiti Tension Eases Despite Guns, Arrest

PORT AU PRINCE (UPI)—Tension in this Haitian capital eased somewhat Saturday despite sporadic night-time firing and the reported arrest of a Catholic priest.

Church Talks Planned

VANCOUVER (CP)—Clergy from the Anglican and Roman Catholic churches will meet here later this month in the first large-scale dialogue between the two communions ever held in western Canada.

The conversations, first suggested at a refresher course for Anglican clerics here last summer, will be held at St. Mark's Roman Catholic College in the University of British Columbia May 20-22.

Among the 80 or more clergy to be present are Rt. Rev. Godfrey Gower, Anglican Bishop of New Westminster; Most Rev. Martin M. Johnson, Roman Catholic Coadjutor Archbishop of Vancouver; and Most Rev. Remi de Roo, Roman Catholic Bishop of Victoria.

Main speakers will include Rev. Eugene Fairweather of Trinity College (Anglican), Toronto, and Rt. Rev. Christopher Butler, Abbot of the British Benedictine Abbey of Downside, Bath.

Another of those present will be the abbot's brother, Canon Hilary Butler, canon-lecturer of Christ Church Cathedral, Victoria.

production before a small audience.

Birds of a Feather, a pleasant little Welsh comedy, came first, presented by the Old Vic Players of Victoria.

FINE PERFORMANCE
John Martin turned in an excellent performance as the bishop of mid-Wales, and Stanley Bowles as Twin Tinker was consistently in character. Robin Griffiths as Dicky Daw played the part a bit vehemently and didn't quite catch Dicky's rather fey character.

Arthur Leighton as Jenkins was suitably gruff and the play, directed by Gwen Heulings, was well set and skilfully lit.

CHORAL GROUP
The Sidney Choral Society, now about nine months old, came next.

Their selections were varied, well-chosen and entertaining. They are conducted by Frank Minns, with Helen Thornton as assistant conductor. Accompaniment was by Beatrice Chappell.

The Peninsula Players ended the show with Thornton Wilder's comedy, The Happy Journey, directed by Chuck Swannell. The cast had Florence Smith, Ruth Chudley, Ann Swannell, Larry Scarfield, Marge Donovan and Herb Drew.

GIANT
50 Millimeter

Use a Pair an Entire Month Without Risk or Obligation

The recent dock workers' strike almost bankrupted one of West Germany's leading binocular manufacturers. He could not ship even a single binocular through New York. He was in dire need of cash quick. We bought up his entire U.S. quota for our loyal Canadian customers. Close to 1,000,000 of these quality binoculars have been sold in the U.S., Canada, Europe and South America. The famous German manufacturer's need is your gain. Now you can grab yourself a pair at the amazing low price of just 4.84—rushed to your door—tax paid and post paid! This is far lower than you'd have to pay for a pair of weak Japanese opera glasses.

New, Improved 1963 Model From Century- Old Factory

Western Germany's legendary know-how is reflected in this improved 1963 model. They are manufactured in a century-old factory, renowned throughout the world for its fine craftsmanship. For instance, each binocular undergoes 87 tests before shipment—to ensure satisfactory performance! Objective lenses are interior-coated with costly Magnesium Fluoride. Rugged bakelite and aluminum construction give you durability and light weight as well! This is a GIANT of a binocular—it has real power. Long range lenses measure 50 millimeters across!

Enjoy Thrilling 50-Mile Views

Yes! Thrill to spectacular natural wonders—magnified and brought up close—as far away as 50 miles, and even more, depending on vantage point. But these are only a few of the quality features given you. And it's all yours at the rock-bottom price of only 4.84—no extras!

Popular With Sportsmen in 3 Continents

We cannot mention the famous name during this Sale—but certainly this is one of the world's most famous brands. You'll recognize the famous brand instantly—when you have these binoculars in your hands. Acclaimed by sportsmen everywhere. The reason is that they have real POWER... super FOCUSING RANGE... true CLARITY. That's why practically ONE MILLION PEOPLE use them for all sports, hunting, touring, bird watching. Ideal for ranchers and oil field operators to check work progress in distant areas. Now for the first time you can obtain a pair for only 4.84 postpaid. Of course, this offer is subject to present stocks and may be withdrawn without notice.

One Look Will Convince You of Its Quality!

Please don't confuse these binoculars with certain low-cost imported models with cheap plastic lenses. These famous quality binoculars have hi-fidelity ROTHSCHILD LENSES, genuine optical glass—expertly ground and highly polished! Take just one look and you'll see the big difference at once! No wonder that it is one of the world's best sellers! Close to a million sports lovers cannot be wrong. But you don't have to buy them sight unseen—

Try a Pair for 30 Days Without Risk or Obligation!

Examine them for an entire month! Use and enjoy them on your trips, at sports, for hunting, etc. You must be thrilled and satisfied 100%—otherwise return them for a refund of your 4.84. Actually you risk nothing. You incur no obligation. But it is VITAL that you order NOW—while we have adequate stocks. Orders received too late will be promptly returned. The True Cigarette

Bulgarian Smoker Enjoying It Less

We read the other day where the Bulgarians, of all people, have developed a new cigarette called Atrotabak. The cigarettes are said to contain no nicotine, but have other active ingredients which help in the curing of bronchial asthma, duodenal ulcers, and high blood pressure.

One of the ingredients in the new cigarettes is Scopalamine, otherwise known as the truth drug, which it is said makes one tell all. Needless to add, the introduction of Scopalamine in cigarettes could cause a great deal of complication.

Just think of what is happening in Bulgaria right at this moment.

Ivan Donovich, suffering from an ulcer, goes to his doctor.

"Apparently, Ivan," the doctor says, "you've been smoking more but enjoying it less. I'm going to recommend a new cigarette for you. Take one before meals and one after meals, and double the dose on Sundays. I don't like the look of that ulcer."

Ivan goes out and buys several packs of Atrotabaks and follows the doctor's instructions. In a month he is a new man. His ulcer is gone, his blood pressure is down and he has no bronchial asthma. He returns to the doctor in high spirits.

"Just as I thought," the doctor says, "Atrotabaks did the trick. Any side effects?" "None at all," says Ivan, "except I had to wait two hours in front of that lousy state-owned tobacco shop to buy one stinking pack of cigarettes."

"Ah," says the doctor, "you don't like the Communist form of distribution of goods."

"You can say that again, Doc. The system stinks. And if you want to know the truth, so do the Communists. I liked it much better in this country before the lousy Reds took over."

The doctor holds out a pack of cigarettes and says to Ivan, "Cigarette, Ivan?"

"Don't mind if I do," Ivan takes one. "And let me tell you something else, Doc. Don't think the people are going to stand for it much longer. One of these days we'll all be going to say the heck with it and 'bam!'"

"How do you propose to go 'bam!'"

"Counter-revolution."

Mmmmm, these Atrotabaks taste good like a cigarette should. And they're so mild.

"But even with the mildness they still have cigarette flavor," the doc says. "Do you have any friends who think the way you do?"

"Sure I do. All of us down at the steel mill are ready to throw over the regime. We just need a few guns and tanks and we move."

"Very interesting, Ivan. Do you have the names of your other conspirators?"

"Sure, Doc. I'd be happy to give them to you."

Ivan names all his friends. The doctor writes out another prescription and hands it to Ivan.

"What's this for?"

"The secret police, Ivan. You're under arrest as an enemy of the state."

Two burly plainclothes policemen come in and drag Ivan away. His trial is swift and he is sentenced to be shot before a firing squad.

Just before he is blindfolded, the captain comes up to him. "You can have a last cigarette. Would you care for an Atrotabak?"

"No, sir. I'm changing brands. I'll take a Dudnikok. At least the only thing they give you is cancer."

Cost, Possibilities

New Fad in Homes Is Return to Old

Slip Costs $90,000

WELLINGTON, N.Z. (CP)—The most expensive single item of cargo damage ever known here occurred when a slipper slipped on a case being unloaded from a freighter. The case contained electronic computer equipment for the New Zealand Broadcasting Corporation. The $90,000 equipment was damaged beyond repair.

Pearkes To Open Parley

Lieutenant-Governor Pearkes will open the 25th biennial convention of the Royal Canadian Legion, at Kamloops High School Auditorium, May 19.

More than 350 official delegates will confer on 114 resolutions affecting veterans.

Tours to Tod Mountain and on Shuswap lakes have been arranged for the women.

Special coaches will leave Vancouver Saturday with delegates from the lower mainland.

TORONTO (CP)—The new set fashion fad in homes is a return to the old.

Ruth Home, past president of the Architectural Conservancy of Ontario, says old houses are coming more into style every day, especially in larger cities.

WANT AMENITIES

"People who want an old house usually want the amenities that go with it—the high ceilings, large rooms, lots of rooms, sturdy construction and central location."

Also the cost of an old house can be spread over a longer period than the cost of a new one. "You can move into it and chew at it," says Miss Home.

who, with her sister, has been re-decorating a three-story five-bedroom Victorian house they purchased five years ago.

DO-IT-YOURSELF

"An older house also allows for greater possibilities with the do-it-yourself programs."

The Architectural Conservancy, an organization of public-spirited individuals from all across Canada who wish to preserve old buildings of architectural, social and historical merit, has found that very few old homes today are in their original condition.

LIKE DRESSES "Buildings are like ladies' dresses—people like to do things with them," says Miss Home, explaining that such features as shingles, windows, paint and wallpaper usually have been changed. The staircases are the most frequently changed feature.

But if 60 per cent of the original building is there, it is worth preserving in most cases, she said.

Bid Total 'Fantastic' For Saanich Areas

Saanich planning staff is handling a fantastic number of subdivision applications for residential use, town planner Tony Parr says. "At present we are dealing with five large subdivisions — 20 to 30 lots — south of Feltham, near the university campus," he says.

LAKE AREAS
"And there is a very definite interest in subdivisions in the Elk and Beaver Lake areas and north of Elk Lake—sites of 50 to 200 acres."

Mr. Parr said 100 lots have been or are being created in the Ruby Road area, west of the Gordon Head campus.

He said two factors tend to concentrate new housing subdivisions in that area — it is severed and it is close to the new campus.

SERVICE FIRST
When inquiries are received about subdivisions outside the severed areas of Saanich, attempts are made to interest developers in "filling up" the services areas first.

"Saanich is the area into which Greater Victoria must expand," he said. "Our severed areas are filling up rapidly and there is some demand for us to expand sewerage to further areas."

$100 Gift Starts Workshop Fund

A donation of $100 has started a fund to build a laboratory and workshop at Thomas Francis Park for use by the Junior branch of Victoria Natural History Society.

Money was donated by Mrs. Harry Mutt, 855 Douglas, to park curator Freeman King.

Raw Oil Outside Boiled Inside

By CHARLES A. TAYLOR

Q. I didn't know there were two kinds of linseed oil. Can you straighten me out? I wanted it to mix a formula which a friend of mine gave me several years ago to obtain a clear finish on wood. He said mix two parts of linseed oil to one of turpentine—R.C.S.

A. Yes, you can buy two kinds of linseed oil—raw and boiled. The raw is usually preferred for exterior work and the boiled for interior projects. For your project, however, I am sure you want the boiled linseed oil. This combination of oil and turpentine must be applied either to new wood or old wood from which the paint or varnish has been removed. It will be a clear finish, allowing the grain of the wood to show, but it will make the wood slightly darker than it is naturally. Be sure to buy a good quality of linseed oil and turpentine. Incidentally, did your friend tell you that this type of finish also needs a lot of "elbow grease"? After you apply the mixture, go over the wood with a dry cloth, removing all excess oil. Then, after about one-half hour of drying, take another dry cloth and start rubbing. You cannot rub too long or too hard. If you get tired, come back to it a while later. Then wait a week and give the wood another dry-cloth rubdown. The week after that, do the same thing. The more you rub, the more you hasten the development of a satin wood finish and the better your job will be.

Q.—Ever since we moved into our present home, we have noticed a foul and musty odor in our living room and in one bedroom. No matter how long we leave the windows open, the smell persists. Can anything be done to remove it? Our house is of stucco exterior and it has hardwood floors.—Mrs. F.M.

A.—Inspect the crawl space under your house, which should be dry and well-ventilated. Odors arise from constant dampness. This can be corrected by covering the ground with strips of polyethylene plastic or moisture-proof building paper, overlapping at least six inches. Seal the joints with asphalt cement. Ventilation of the crawl space year around is necessary. Otherwise the atmospheric moisture, if locked in, may cause wood to rot and will promote foul odors. We also recently received a hint from a reader who had this problem which he solved by hoisting out the sewer vents. Activated charcoal used in the room might be of some help. The ventilation in the attic also should be checked. At least one square-foot of louver opening should be allowed for each 300 square-feet of attic space.

Edmonton Captures First Memorial Cup

EDMONTON (CP)—Edmonton Oil Kings held off a late rush by Niagara Falls Flyers for a 4-3 victory Saturday night and their first Memorial Cup junior hockey championship.

Oil Kings took the best-of-seven series four games to two. Edmonton thus became the first club west of Manitoba to win the cup since 1930.

Oil Kings, before a sellout crowd of more than 6,700, held a firm hand in the game until eleven minutes were left in the final period. Flyers came back for three goals and just missed tying the game in the dying seconds of the game.

Doug Fox, Glen Sather, Butch Paul and Greg Pilling shared in the Oil King scoring while Bill Glashan, Ron Schock and Terry Crisp replied for Niagara Falls.

As the final siren went hundreds of fans poured onto the ice. All the Oil King players rushed to goalie Russ Kirk and hoisted him onto their shoulders.

WIN WAS EARNED

For most of the game Oil Kings outshouted, outchecked and outshot the injury-riddled Flyers. They held a 1-0 margin after the first period, moved ahead 3-0 in the second and went ahead 4-0 in the third before Flyers made their dogged comeback attempt.

Kirk, who had his ups and downs in the series, came to Oil Kings' rescue in the final minutes, making a key save off Wayne Maxner with less than five minutes to play. He then turned aside two bouncing shots in the final minute after Flyers had pulled goalie George Gardner in favor of a sixth attacker.

MISSED NET

Crisp, who continually picked up his club just when they were running out of gas, missed the tying goal by six inches with ten seconds remaining. Moments before, he drilled another shot just wide of the right side of the Edmonton net with Kirk screened on the play.

SANDY KOUFAX
... second one

No-Hitter for Koufax; Just Two Reach First

Los Angeles Dodgers lefty Sandy Koufax, plagued by a sore finger throughout the 1962 season has hurled the second no-hit, no-run game of his major league career.

Koufax stopped the first-place

San Francisco Giants, 8-0, last night in Los Angeles.

Koufax, who pitched his first no-hitter against the New York Mets last June 30, had a perfect game going until the eighth when he walked Giants catcher Ed Bailey. But Bailey against San Francisco April 28, 1961.

In the American League, Chicago White Sox made it six in a row by defeating Los Angeles Angels 4-2, although getting only five hits. The difference was Dave Nicholson's seventh home run, which came with two mates aboard. Also helping was Jim Bronan, the pitching author, who blanked the Angels after being rushed in during the sixth inning.

Perhaps more significant, however, was yesterday's performance by the New York Yankees. The defending champions haven't been hitting with old authority to waste good pitching when they get it, and they went into action at Baltimore even for the season at 12-12 after four straight losses.

EASY VICTORY

The Orioles knocked out starter Stan Williams in the first inning but southpaw Steve Hamilton, a recent trade acquisition from Washington Senators, came in to handuff Baltimore the rest of the way and get an easy victory as the Yankees finally broke loose.

They punched over seven runs in the fourth inning, wound up with 19 hits in a 13-1 rout. Mickey Mantle and Roger Maris, who came close to getting two others, each hit a home run and Cleto Boyer had four hits. Hamilton struck out 11 and allowed but three hits.

SWIM MEETING

Annual meeting of Victoria Amateur Swimming Club will be held Monday at 7:30 at Crystal Garden.

Hill Bringing The Drunkard

By BERT BINNY

If, for any reason at all, you want an elephant, an early vintage washing machine, a stagecoach or a gas-ring, the man to see is Fred Hill.

The procurement of rare and unusual properties is one of Mr. Hill's remarkable talents; talents used all the time by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

But he has others too.

Publicity and promotion, particularly of plays, is another of his accomplishments. In this field he has been responsible for some outstanding feats including a washing machine race in Vancouver to publicize a play, The Washing Machine.

During a Vancouver run of Erskine Caldwell's Tobacco Road, an irate female member of the audience got up and left, vowing to do something about what, in her opinion, was indecency.

Charge Laid

She happened to run into Mr. Hill, the play's publicity man, and was promptly advised by him to lay a charge with the police under the Criminal Code of Canada. This she did.

As a result, the authorities decided to raid Tobacco Road.

Ex-City Woman Dies in Calgary

Mrs. G. M. Ralston, of the Mayfair Rest Home, 1037 Richardson, received word of the death Thursday of her sister, Mrs. Charles (Ora) Sheppard, in Calgary, after a brief illness.

Her sister, the former Miss Ora Walker, was born in Sarina, Ont., and lived in Victoria some years ago while attending a business school here.

Crew Rescued In Ship Crash

THE HAGUE (Reuters) — The 16-man crew of the Hamburg freighter Nordenham was rescued after the vessel collided with a Swiss ship, the 7,968-ton Rone.

The crew of the Nordenham, afloat but listing heavily, was picked up by a Hamburg coaster and a pilot boat.

JEANNIE BELCHER
... well-known here

May 24 and 25—and Fred Hill is promoting it.

The Drunkard was first produced in 1943 by P. T. Barnum and ran 9,477 performances at the Theatre Mart in Los Angeles following its revival in 1933.

For Coffee House

For coffee house presentation, the original script, thought by some to have been written by William Makepeace Thackeray, has been adapted by Raymond Hill, a prominent CBC playwright.

The original play had nine characters; the new version has just six. The scenery and props have been so ingeniously compacted Mr. Hill can transport the whole play in his small import car except, of course, the cast.

Another interesting feature of the production is the inclusion in the cast of Jeannie Belcher, who plays Mary, the persecuted heroine.

Jeannie, now a receptionist with the CBC in Vancouver, was formerly well known in Victoria both for stage appearances and for outstanding successes in the music festival.

Two Men Drown

OCEAN FALLS, (CP) — Two men drowned in Twin Lakes near this up-coast pulp and paper town when their boat overturned while they were on a fishing trip. RCMP identified one of the men as Joseph Desormeaux, 28, of Ocean Falls.

Special Slide

This he did by projecting a specially prepared slide from across the street, rearranging a spirited protest against it and argument in favor of it.

The riot squad was called out and, of course, the proceedings drew a huge crowd. Publicity for The Matchmaker was the only result.

Mr. Hill is also an actor. He was in Victoria yesterday in connection with a coffeehouse version of that famous old melodrama, The Drunkard, in which he plays the villain, Lewyer Gibbs.

The Drunkard comes to The Secret, an Government Street.

East Has Record Snow, Ottawa Parade Off

MONTREAL (CP) — A freak blizzard Saturday dumped nearly 10 inches of snow on Montreal and six inches on Ottawa where a parade of more than 500 members of school safety patrols from across Canada was cancelled. In Montreal it was the heaviest May snowfall and the coldest ever May 10, with the mercury at the freezing mark. In Ottawa the snow was the heaviest since 1907.

Island Indian Festival Cancelled for 1963

No Vancouver Island Indian Festival will be held this year, Chief John Albany announced yesterday.

Financial difficulties caused cancellation of the festival which was to have been held here next weekend, the Songhees chief said.

FIRST TIME

This will be the first year the colorful Indian festivities have been called off since they were started 12 years ago by the late chief Percy Ross of the Songhees band.

"We will have occasional activities during the summer to build up our park fund which is very low, and if we are lucky, we'll be back bigger than ever next year," said Chief Albany.

It costs between $1,800 and $2,100 to put on the show each year, and part of this amount goes for expense money and prizes to the various bands participating, he said.

Victoria University Students To Host Federation Next Year

Students at the University of Victoria will host next year's conference of the western region of the National Federation of Canadian University students.

The news was released yesterday when 10 Victoria students returned from this year's conference at UBC.

UNANIMOUS DECTION

The 50 delegates at the conference unanimously approved the move after Alma Mater Society president Larry Devlin pointed out the benefits of such a plan to both the federation and the University of Victoria.

He said that the hosting of the conference here for the first time would add to the long list of firsts for the new university next year and would firmly establish the national federation on the campus.

The conference, planned for May, 1964, will have 50 delegates from at least six universities as far east as Winnipeg.

All 10 Victoria delegates at this year's conference agreed that it was an invaluable experience.

WOMEN SUFFER BLADDER IRRITATION MORE OFTEN THAN MEN

After 11 years of study, doctors at the University of Toronto have made a discovery that women are more susceptible to urinary tract irritation caused by a germ, Escherichia Coli. To quickly combat the organisms, doctors advise women to take antibiotics for a few days. All you do is take a little CRISTEX tablet with a glass of water. In addition to its cleansing antibiotic action, CRISTEX is also an analgesic to relieve bladder pain, burning, itching, stinging and muscular pain. One CRISTEX from drugist. Pool better feel.

Canadians will be proud to know that an all-Canadian company is now first in Automobile Insurance in Canada!

This Packard roadster was built in 1928, the same year that Wawanesa issued its first automobile policy.

Canadian insurance statistics now show that in 1962 the Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Company became the largest insurer of automobiles in Canada. The biggest bar none!

With stiff foreign and domestic competition facing us in every province, it's taken a few years to achieve first place in writing automobile policies. But now that it's happened, we're proud to be first — and we'll work hard to stay there.

In spite of this success, our head office is still in Wawanesa, Manitoba (population 459) where we rub shoulders with our friends and customers — farmers, mechanics, shopkeepers. Our small town approach and old-fashioned business sense keep us on the right track — we treat policyholders as friends, not statistics.

To be the largest insurer of automobiles is important. But more than that, it's dollars and sense proof that motorists all over Canada like Wawanesa's way of doing business.

News note: On March 1st, 1963, Wawanesa became the first insurance company in Canada to issue non-cancellable auto policies.

Garden Notes

By M. V. CHESNUT, FRHS

CARE OF CUT TULIPS (B. E. S., Cordova Bay)—Tulips never seem to last long in water if you cut them in the heat of the day. The trick here is to pick them in the cool of the early morning, selecting specimens in which the bud is showing full color but has not yet opened. Plunge them up to their necks in cold water, wrapping the bundle of stems first with aluminum foil to keep them straight, and keep the bucket in the basement or some other cool place where there are no drafts. After three hours of dunking, after they have drunk their fill, you can take them out and arrange them to suit your taste.

In picking, you can take a good long stem without injury to the bulb as long as you don't take more than one leaf—the little one halfway up the stem. All the other leaves must be left on the plant to plump up the bulb for next year's flowers.

COUCH GRASS (N.J., Victoria)—I am sorry to say there is no anti-couch grass chemical yet discovered that can be sprayed all over the lawn which will not also kill the desirable lawn grasses. There are two methods, however, whereby couch (quack) grass may be eradicated from a lawn. If the couch is only showing up as odd tufts here and there in the lawn, it can be killed by wetting the leaves with a sponge or cloth soaked in Dowpon solution. Dowpon, sometimes called Dalcapon, kills ALL grasses, so this treatment will leave bare patches to be reseeded later, but at least the couch roots will be dead. This is much better than trying to dig up the clumps, for invariably some of the white, creeping roots are left in the ground to sprout again.

If the couch is too widespread for spot treatment, it can be eliminated over a period of time by a method worked out at the U.S. Experimental Station in Beltsville, Maryland, but it is a long and laborious process.

First, set up your mower so it is cutting 1½ inches high. Mow twice a week, without fail, regularly all through the growing season. Put down lawn fertilizer, 2 lbs per 100 square feet, every fourth week.

This combination of high mowing, frequent mowing and heavy feeding will gradually weaken the couch and encourage the lawn grasses, but don't expect to see much improvement for at least one full growing season.

Couch, quack and twitch are all names for the same critter. Crab grass is a different breed of cat and can be killed with chemicals without injury to the lawn. In fact, you can buy lawn grass fertilizer today which has a crab grass killer incorporated.

INJURED BLUE SPRUCE (J. J. de L., Nanaimo)—Your small blue spruce with its tip accidentally broken off may still be grown into a shapely tree with the help of a little careful orthopedic surgery.

First, cut back the injured tip to within half an inch of the top tier of branchlets. It isn't necessary in the case of the spruce to apply a dressing or tree paint to the wound, as the gummy sap will seal the cut surface.

Two new tips—possibly three—will start growing in the angle formed by the stub and the branchlets. As soon as they can be clearly distinguished and appraised, nip off all but the strongest and best-placed. Allow the selected tip to grow, and it should straighten out and continue the interrupted upward growth of the tree.

VITAMIN-4 IN PARSELEY (P. G. Y., Victoria)—It is quite true that parseley is actually richer in vitamin A than any of the citrus fruits. One ounce of the freshly picked leaves will provide not less than 30,000 international units of vitamin A, and as a normal human requires only 5,000 units daily, it follows that you can secure your total daily requirement from only one-sixth of an ounce of parseley. Parseley is also rich in iron and contains significant amounts of vitamin K, the stuff that makes your blood clot when you cut your finger.

The Peculiar World of SHEILAH GRAHAM

Love Many-Sundered Thing

HOLLYWOOD (NANA)—E. J. Wagner is now doing his bit in the name of love. To please Marion Dumes who prefers to live in California because of her custody fight for her children with London-based Wesley Dumes, R.J. has just bought himself a big beautiful house in Tarzana, which is about 20 miles from Hollywood. He is also signing a big beautiful new contract with Columbia. And he will give up living in Europe and stay happily married ever after with Marion in Hollywood. By the way, when are they getting married?

Talking of fights for children, Jacques Bergerac will put on a big huff and puff to get his kids from divorcing wife Dorothy Malone. But they are her children also. And very very young. And most courts prefer young children to remain with the mother... It's not as though Dorothy can't support them. She always has.

Haven't Liz and Eddie and Richard and Sybil, set a new pattern for warring mates. The Fishers have the same lawyer to handle their problems. Louis Nare. And the Bartens also have the same lawyer for theirs—Aaron French.

Reading that Bella Davis had legally changed daughter E.D.'s last name back to Wherry from Merrill-Gary adopted her when they were married—reminded me of how much she loathed William Wherry when they divorced. As much as she loathes Gary now. And Gary cost her less. Gary received a house and a plane.

Biggest signboard ever constructed for a motion picture, is the 210-foot painted spectacular for Stanley Kramer's It's a Mad, etc. World. It extends an entire block on Hollywood's Sunset Boulevard, covering an eight-foot high fence where the new cinerama theatre is being built for the world premiere of the picture, November 7.

Joan Cohn's ex-dress business partner whipped her up a gorgeous wardrobe including a green chiffon ballroom gown to go with her million dollar emerald necklace. Then Joan, complete with clothes and necklace, took off for Ireland to join Laurence Harvey.

If you look very, very very closely at the bracelet Judy Garland wears in I Could Go on Singing you will read the inscription, "To Judy, my favorite screen, sincerely (Gable) Gable." It was given to her by the late Mr. Gable after Judy sang, that Dear Mr. Gable hit, oh so many years ago.

Unashamed Optimist He's Skeptical About All Isms

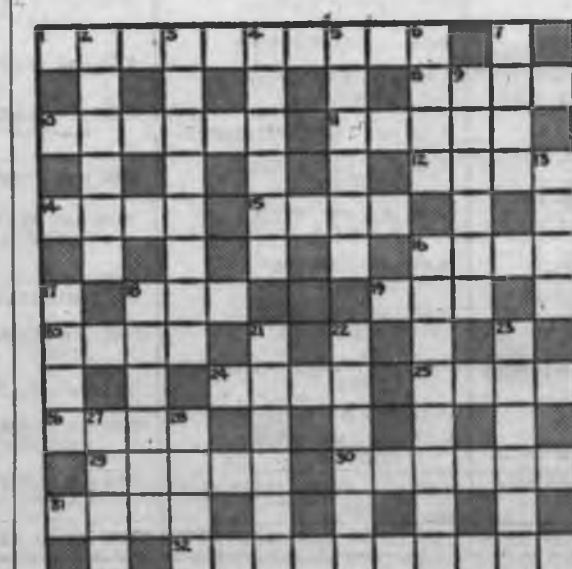

By RUDOLF FLEISCH

As I said before in this column, my favorite among the world's living philosophers is Prof. Karl R. Popper of the University of London. For my money, he's just about the wisest man alive. Popper is skeptical about all absolute doctrines, all isms, all faiths in this, that or the other system. He doesn't believe in Utopia, nor does he believe that the end of civilization is near. Looking sanely at the world as it is today, he sees progress. Life on earth is slowly being improved by science, by reason, by human thinking and experimentation. We do learn by our mistakes.

Popper is an unashamed optimist. This world, he says—the Western world of the 1960s—is the best that history has ever known. There's no reason for gloom and despair; patient, piecemeal efforts are bound to pay off in the long run. In his latest book, Conjectures and Refutations (Basic Books), Popper says this about the struggle between democracy and communism: "A revolution is liable to replace old masters by new ones, and who guarantees that the new ones will be better? The theory of revolutions overlooks the most important aspect of social life—that what we need is not so much good men as good institutions. Even the best man may be corrupted by power, but institutions which permit the ruled to exert some effective control over the rulers will force even bad rulers to do what the ruled consider to be in their interests. There are only two kinds of government: the good and the bad."

"This could, I believe, lead to agreement on social reform. For new ways of happiness are theoretical, unreal things, about which it may be difficult to form an opinion. But misery is with us, here and now, and it will be with us for a long time to come. We all know it from experience. Let us combat the most urgent and real social evils one by one, here and now, instead of sacrificing generations for a distant and perhaps forever unrealizable greatest good."

Fake Doctor Gets 30 Days in Jail

Alberta

An Edmonton man has been sentenced to 30 days in jail for impersonating a doctor.

Laurie Nadeau, 27, gave a man some tranquillizer pills after suggesting he was receiving incorrect treatment for high blood pressure.

The pills, which can be obtained only by prescription, caused the patient "to wander around in a daze for a day," according to his wife.

"He appeared very much like a doctor," she added. "A real gentleman."

He claimed to be a pathologist. His fraud was discovered when the woman called the hospital.

A severe grasshopper infestation is expected in farming districts north and east of Calgary this year. District agriculturalist Al Beattie told a meeting of farmers and other landowners at Alder's the grasshopper population may be as great as 2,000 to the square yard. Normal density is five.

After 47 years of service with the Bank of Montreal, W. Charles Morley has retired as superintendent of the Alberta division. A dinner in his honor was held recently in the Palliser Hotel in Calgary, attended by more than 350 guests.

Former principal of Calgary Normal School, Dr. E. W. Coffin has died. He was principal of Calgary Normal from 1911 to 1940.

Mayor Elmer Roper of Edmonton was "decontaminated" in Calgary when he arrived Thursday with a group of Junior Chamber of Commerce members to challenge Calgary in a clean-up campaign. They were headed into a roped-off area of the airport terminal and put through a mock fumigation by a professional pest exterminator.

Western members of the National Federation of Canadian University Students want to hold a conference on "contamination" in Banff next May. They adopted the principle of the conference in Vancouver at a regional meeting. Action to bring it about will be the responsibility of the University of Alberta, Calgary.

Mayor Elmer Roper of Edmonton said he would support a move to bring daylight time to Alberta cities. Ald. Ted Duncan will ask Calgary City Council to approve a resolution asking the provincial government to implement daylight time.

Beginning at one minute after midnight of May 18 all of Manitoba will be operating on daylight saving time. A uniform time bill was approved at the recent session of the provincial legislature at Winnipeg.

Manitoba has just experienced the wettest April since the turn of the century, officials at Winnipeg report. Rainfall amounted to 3.56 inches, compared with the average of 1.28. There was 3 inches of snow. But it was warm, summer and less windy than usual. Temperature averaged 41 instead of 38 and the 211 hours of sunshine were 11 above the mean.

A 19-year-old boy burned by a neighbor's barbecue in Winnipeg has been awarded $3,050 damages in court of Queen's Bench. Frank Mirecki, whose face and chest were burned when a neighbor, Mrs. Louise Shapiro, poured chemical on her lighted barbecue in June of 1961, was awarded the damages.

The Tribune in Winnipeg says a confidential inter-office memo concerning extra security precautions to be taken at the Trans-Canada Air Lines base in Montreal has arrived in Mayor Stephen Juba's office. The action has been taken because of "recent bomb scares," the newspaper says.

The Air Transport Board has authorized TransAir to change existing route patterns. The board says it has authorized TransAir to serve Churchill, Man. on its Flies From Ljns Lake run, as well as on its The Pas-Thompson route.

Police Draw Blank

LONDON — Police have been visiting the homes of artists as part of the continuing hunt for the famous Goya painting of the Duke of Wellington, stolen from London's National Gallery.

Among the artists visited was Lawrence Isherwood, of Wigan, Lancashire.

Upset by the police search, Isherwood decided to get his own back.

Borrowing a color transparency from the Gallery, Isherwood made a realistic copy which he carried through Trafalgar Square and even inside the National Gallery itself—without being challenged once.

Humpty-Dumpty Vessel

FLIP Explores Ocean

Weird Ship Stands On Its Head at Sea

SAN DIEGO (LAT) — The huge 355-foot-long "sausage in the sea" hissed, bubbled, gurgled and suddenly lunged forward like a sinking ship, its stern slipping silently out of sight.

Fifteen seconds later, FLIP—one of the strangest vessels ever contrived—became a 65-foot-high tower, standing at a right angle to the sea.

FLIP—its full name is Floating Instrument Platform—cost $300,000 to build, another $300,000 to outfit.

Last week FLIP, the sturdiest vessel afloat, was towed 200 miles out to sea from San Diego on its first research project.

PINGING TONES

Accompanying FLIP was a 65-foot craft. Scientists on the small ship transmitted an array of pinging tone bursts as it maintained various stations 50 to 100 miles away from FLIP.

The sounds were sent deep in the sea in the FLIP's direction. Hydrophones on FLIP's instrument rack, 300 feet in the water, monitored them.

Tap recordings of the tone bursts were made to study limitations the ocean imposes on underwater noise — to learn more about the effects of salinity, temperature, marine life, currents and turbulence on transmission of sound.

FLIP is the brainchild of

Dr. Fred Fisher, 36, physicist and a leading authority on acoustics in the sea.

"For the first time the oceanographer has a steady platform regardless of the condition of the sea—a platform anchored deep in the ocean. We should be able to make studies never possible before," Dr. Fisher explained.

"Up to now it has been impossible to measure many things in the sea because of the motion of the ocean. FLIP—steady as a rock—overcomes this problem. It gives us an opportunity to put delicate instruments on a large rack on the vessel's stern and place them deep into the ocean, giving us data not masked by the noise of a conventional vessel or the pitching of the sea."

HOW IT WORKS

FLIP consists of a 20-foot diameter, 300-foot-long windowless cylindrical hull joined to the base section.

Eleven ballast tanks line the inside of the hull, eight of which are flooded with 1,500 tons of sea water in a precise sequence that slowly flips the vessel into its vertical position.

High pressure air is used to blow the water out of the tanks to flip back to horizontal. Seventy tons of concrete on the horizontal heel makes FLIP right itself properly. It takes 22 minutes from horizontal to vertical, 10 minutes vertical to horizontal.

EVERYTHING SWIVELS

Everything aboard—two three-ton diesel engines, twin ten-and-a-half air compressors, a 1,000-pound engine, racks of electronic gear, stove, refrigerator, tables, chairs, clocks—changes position from horizontal to vertical and back on turntables, swivels and gimbals.

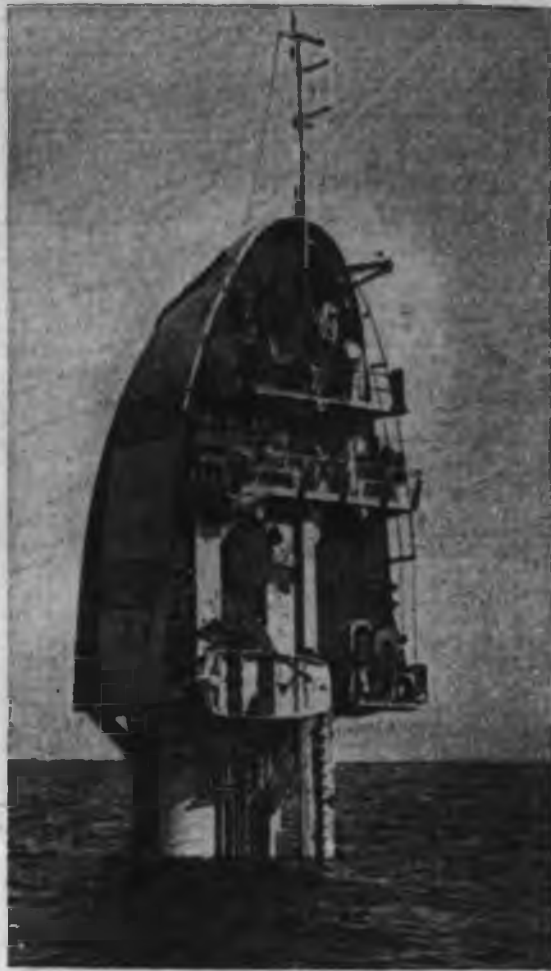

"It sure gets confusing at times," admits Anthony Sousa, FLIP's cook. "If I forget something when we flip, it spills all over the deck. I prefer cooking vertical—more room."

PROTOTYPE

This summer FLIP will be towed midway between Hawaii and the Aleutians where several experiments will be conducted on ocean swells.

FLIP may prove a prototype of platform that will some day dot the seas.

Many oceanographers predict that similar vessels will replace lightships, that larger versions will be used as missile launching, space tracking stations, and oceanographic research laboratories.

Flavor Goes

Old Age Ruins Bottle of Beer

By ZENA CHERRY

Beer, Dear?

Q. Does beer, like wine, improve with age?

A. No! No! A thousand times no! Although five-year-old beer wouldn't poison you or even have any ill effects, as far as flavor goes it should be drunk within three months of purchase.

Q. How can you tell when beer has passed its prime?

A. It "breaks down"—and forms a sort of veil. Sediment often appears on the bottom of the bottle. This is okay for burgundy, but not for beer.

Q. How does Canadian beer compare with the imports?

A. Connoisseurs place Canadian beer among the world's most excellent.

Q. What is the caloric count of beer?

A. The same as two per cent milk—140 calories per 12-ounce bottle—in other words, a pint-size bottle.

Q. How about the alcoholic content of beer?

A. A 12-ounce bottle of beer has the same amount of alcohol as two ounces of rye, gin or scotch. But beer is much better for you because the alcohol is diluted with such energy foods as proteins, vitamins and minerals.

Q. Should glasses be rinsed in cold water before pouring the beer in?

A. Yes. It removes any odors which you might not notice but which beer will pick up—such as cigarette smoke or cooking smells. Also it insures a longer-lasting head.

Q. How does Canadian beer compare with the imports?

A. Connoisseurs place Canadian beer among the world's most excellent.

Pretoria, South Africa, has an average of 3,240 hours of sunshine a year with mean temperature's of 73 degrees in summer and 52 in winter.

Beware Wood Tick If You Camp Out

VANCOUVER (CP)—If you're camping in the B.C. interior this summer, watch out for the wood tick. Properly known as the Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever Tick, it can be dangerous, Prof. G. J. Spencer of the University of B.C. warns.

Although perhaps only one in 1,000 carry poison, those that do can cause paralysis and even death.

"The symptoms appear like an attack of polio," the entomologist said. In other words: fatigue spreading from the legs upward, a feeling of lassitude, and finally paralysis of the legs.

"If it reaches the lungs or other vital organs, the person could die," said Dr. Spencer.

The tick is found in the Okanagan, Kootenay, and sometimes as far north as Kamloops, but not in Coastal areas.

The tick should be removed gently, and if the mouth-piece remains in the flesh, a needle should be used to dig it out, said Dr. Spencer.

Once the tick is out, any paralysis that has set in will probably vanish within 24 hours, although it is advisable to call a doctor.

Records since 1900 show more than 30 deaths due to tick bites in B.C. and more than 1,000 cases of temporary paralysis.

Diary of Adventure

Victorian Meets Hospitality In Warlike Syria

Old Boy High School graduate John Deelman, 28, of 250 Douglas, was on a World Tour, in the Middle East, accompanied by Jan Baughman, 31, a German who hopes to study at UBC. Last week they reached Damascus. Here they explore that Biblical city, then swing north into Turkey with Iran as their next goal.

By JOHN DEELMAN

I then sat down for the feast: Sergeant Three in English, with French and Arabic subtitles. Next day we went to the Iraqi embassy to apply for visas for that country so we could travel through to Iran. We were refused, although a junior official at first offered to help us for $10. That afternoon we saw the bus leaving for Baghdad, Iraq, with only two passengers.

Jan and I went out to look around Damascus and soon found ourselves talking to a Syrian architect who invited us to stay with him as his guests.

It is very common in Middle Eastern countries to receive invitations on the street—to go to dinner or to stay at someone's home. The people are very friendly and want to learn of other places away from their homeland.

ALL FROM BOOKS

The next night we spent at the home of our Syrian friend. He seemed very anxious to go to North America and I was peppered with questions right and left. He said there was no real training in his country for students, and that all they know is from books.

He said they expect a revolution any moment and he was afraid that he would never be able to get out of his country and see the world as we are.

He took us out and showed us examples of army life in Damascus. We went to the radio station which the army had taken during the last revolution. Outside were six tanks and many soldiers carrying machine guns. Our friend said the guns were not loaded, but that the men carry ammunition in belts.

STOPPED BY POLICE

I asked him if I could take a picture and he took me to an empty office building nearby where I took shots of the activity outside.

We went next to the main street of Damascus and here we were stopped by police and I was asked whether I had taken any pictures. My Syrian friend said I had only taken statues and such things, and after our passports were checked we were allowed to go on to the Bazaar—the longest in the world.

We came out at a large mosque with a mosaic dome, and shed our shoes (as is the custom) before going in.

HUGE CARPET

The floor was completely covered with Persian rugs, sewn together to make one huge carpet. We were told each rug cost nearly $300 and that there were 125 of them altogether—all given by families of people who had died during the past 300 years. Out of the mosque again, we were invited to a nearby movie theatre. First shown was a five-minute film of soldiers marching, various tanks and other military equipment. Every one stood up during this.

Peace Job Goes Ahead, B.C. Magistrates Told

Work on the Peace River hydroelectric development is rapidly getting back on schedule, Dr. Gordon Shrum, co-chairman of the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority, said Friday night.

Dr. Shrum, who has just returned from a trip to the Peace, addressed and showed a film to 125 magistrates from all parts of B.C. who were winding up their annual conference here.

He said that, with the recent awarding of by far the largest construction contract ever in B.C., costs of Peace construction are continuing to be below what had been estimated.

The magistrates have been exchanging ideas and information in business sessions on legal matters and matters of procedure.

Attorney-General Bonner, whose department sponsors the conference, said this year's was an extremely successful one.

By KURT VON TROJAN

VIENNA (Reuters)—Austria is offering the chance of finding a fabulous treasure to cave-minded tourists this summer.

If the treasure fails to turn up, at least the tourist should enjoy the breath-taking beauty of the caves close to Lofer in Salzburg Province.

This subterranean wonderland, the only one of its kind in Austria, is named the Lamprechtlocher—Lamprecht's Stove-hole—after a dynasty of medieval knights.

They lived in a castle on the mountain above and were the most feared robber barons of their time.

Today, the castle, the fortress Saaleck, lies in ruins. According to legend, the riches amassed by the Lamprechts still lie hidden somewhere in the caves below.

HUNTERS DIED

When explorers first entered the caves for scientific purposes early last century, they found the skeletons of 198 treasure hunters who had perished there.

The treasure, it is said, belonged to the last Sir Lamprecht, who was killed by his brother-in-law in a duel over a family dispute some 600 years ago.

Sir Lamprecht had two daughters, one of whom was blind. Her sister cheated her out of most of her share. In punishment, the sister was later sealed into one of the caves with her entire wealth.

But no trace of the treasure has ever been found. Explorers have also searched in vain for a secret passage from the ruins of the fortress down into the caves.

TOURS DANGEROUS

The caves themselves are estimated to be about 2,500,000 years old, created by water seeping into the limestone of the mountain. So far, some four miles have been explored, but not all is accessible to the public.

For visitors, 387 steps have been cemented into the cave floor and 800 yards lit with electric light, illuminating walls of reddish marble, strange coral formations and peatly stalactites.

French Plans

Chateaux Tourist Lure

PARIS (UPI)—France is pushing plans for a new tourist attraction by which visitors will be able to tour the country staying in the history-steeped chateau homes of the past.

Cultural minister Andre Malraux, well launched on a campaign to restore and preserve the relics of France's past grandeur, is reported to be backing the scheme personally.

Scores of "stately homes" dotted throughout the countryside are to be converted into hotels, restaurants and museums. Part of the idea is to provide top-class accommodations in regions of the country seldom probed by tourists.

Tourists from abroad will be able to explore hundreds of little-known historic segments and the sort of gourmet country inns for which France's byways are famous.

The idea of turning France's chateaux into tourist bait recalled the conversion of castles and abbeys in Spain and Portugal which was the basis of tourist traffic in those two countries.

It is not a new idea. For many years the castles of the Loire River Valley have been a setting for tourist excursions. Many minor stately homes already are operating as hotels. Among more than a score already available, prices range from reasonable to expensive according to the facilities provided. But all give the tourist the feeling of living for a few days in the splendor of the French country estate of yesteryear.

Plane Found In B.C. Lake

PENTICTON (CP)—The main wreckage of a twin-engine Aero Commander plane has been recovered from Skaha Lake where it crashed after a mid-air collision with a smaller plane April 27, killing eight persons. The body of Earl Sibley, 26, of Calgary, pilot of the smaller plane, also was found.

NEW WAY TO EUROPE!

Now sail to France and England from Vancouver on P&O-Orient and explore the sunny Caribbean on your way—for as little as $691 first class!

Here's a remarkable vacation bargain: a sea voyage to Europe that lasts three weeks, with sightseeing stopovers in sparkling Caribbean ports—all for as little as $691 first class. Less than you'd spend on an 11-hour flight from the West Coast to Europe first class! Clip coupon below for full details.

Two P&O-Orient liners sail to Europe—via the Caribbean—this Summer. They'll take slightly different routes, visit different ports. First class accommodations are now available on both ships.

Look at the map above and pick the route to Europe that suits you best.

Himalaya sails from Vancouver June 29. Oriana sails from Vancouver July 11.

Like all P&O-Orient liners, these are ships in the grand manner—the largest and fastest sailing round the world. Himalaya is longer than two football fields, and Oriana is even bigger.

Both ships are fully air-conditioned. They have literally acres of open deck, and swimming pools in both tourist and first class. They have giant stabilizers, too—underwater fins that smooth your ride over the sea.

And the British service on board is quietly spectacular. It has to be—to satisfy the rajahs, diplomats, and tycoons who sail regularly with P&O-Orient.

When and where you sail

Himalaya's voyage: Sail June 29, 24 days, 9 ports of call, 7 countries. Your first ports of call are San Francisco and Long Beach. Then, on to Acapulco, Panama, Curacao, Trinidad, and Barbados. You arrive at Le Havre July 21, at Southampton July 22.

Oriana's voyage: Sail July 11, 22 days, 8 ports of call, 8 countries. Your first stops are at San Francisco, San Diego, and Acapulco. Then on to Balboa, Cristobal, Jamaica, and Bermuda. You arrive at Le Havre July 31, at Southampton August 1.

Once in Europe, you are already halfway round the world. Be adventurous. Go all the way. You can sail home via the Mediterranean, India and the South Pacific (or the Orient) for as little as $1657 first class, $951 tourist class. That's the whole fare for the globe-circling trip!

NOTE: If you're planning a Fall or Winter vacation, you can take a leisurely trip round the world on Oriana, sailing from San Francisco November 10 for the Caribbean and Europe. After two weeks in Britain—or Southern Europe—you sail on to Naples, Port Said, Singapore, Sydney, the Fiji Islands and Hawaii. You arrive back in Vancouver February 8. Fourteen countries for less, by the day, than you'd spend at a landlocked resort hotel!

Langford Plea:

Lake Plugged
—Clear Ditch!

By JACK FRY

Angry Langford Lake residents are demanding the provincial highways department clear a drainage ditch they claim is responsible for the popular swimming lake becoming an unpleasant pea soup-like algae fog.

Biologists disagree on what is causing the green algae which has filled the lake, but lakeside residents maintain it is caused by fertilizer pumped as floodwater from an adjacent farm.

Residents claim that, if a drainage ditch at the west end of the lake were cleared of debris, the lake level would drop and there would be no floodwater to pump from the farmer's field.

A culvert placed under the road during new Island Highway construction would have to be lowered.

Provincial regional biologist David Hurn, of Nanaimo, who conducted a survey of the lake in 1959 and 1960, says he expects the algae is caused by detergents which seep into the lake and build up because they never dissolve.

But it will be a number of years before the concentration reaches a point where this can be proved, he says.

Other provincial biologists, based in Victoria, discount his theory and say fertilizer is a

You can't see palms of your hands in half-inch of water because of algae in Langford Lake. —(Jack Fry) nutrient which encourages growth of algae.

They say detergents are not a nutrient at all and that, if anything, they might hinder the growth of algae in a lake the same as they hinder the operation of a septic tank.

Algae was thick in the lake in 1959, 1960 and 1961.

After repeated, fruitless requests to the government to clear the drainage ditch, the Frank Ray family partially cleared it themselves in 1961.

The district highways engineer supplied dynamite and blasting caps, and a back hoe was rented through contributions from lakeside residents.

No Problem Last Year

Farmer Aubrey Hull said he did not pump water into the lake from his 40-acre field in 1962, after the ditch had been cleared by the Rays.

There was no algae problem last year.

Mr. Hull said he thought it was "worth a try" to clear the ditch because it might help reduce the amount of algae.

He felt the government should do it, rather than the lakeside residents, because "drainage is the government's baby."

The highways department has steadfastly refused to clean the ditch for fear it would set a precedent.

But the old public works department did clean the ditch in 1948, and after that the algae problem which had been building up disappeared for more than a decade until the ditch again became plugged.

When the lake is high, nearly all of Mr. Hull's 40-acre field is flooded. Water from the heavily fertilized field runs into a ditch from where it is pumped directly into the lake. The lake level is extremely high this year, and Mr. Hull said he "started pumping about a week ago." The drainage ditch is plugged again.

It was nearly a week ago that lakeside residents noticed a tremendous buildup of algae and started complaining.

"I think if the ditch was lowered and some of the water run off there would be less algae," said Mrs. Ray.

Regional fishery biologist Hurn said he thought a lowering of the lake level would only aggravate the algae condition because the shallower a lake gets the warmer the water becomes and the more algae will grow there.

Biologists in Victoria agree.

Mum's
Day
Today

This is Mother's Day and, from all indications, a big day for gifts—as business was booming in downtown and suburban stores through-out Greater Victoria Saturday. Cards in particular sold well; most racks had wide-open spaces.

Mother's Day isn't just one day, it's three—yesterday when everyone was doing last-minute shopping, today when mother reigns supreme, and tomorrow.

Then, all the mothers lovingly given stockings that are too long, nightgowns too small and handbags that don't go with anything, take them back to be exchanged.

Mink, Worms

Henry Lucky
Chick

By TED SHACKLEFORD

There's a pot-bellied bird brain boarding in an apartment on Dallas Road and he's leading the life of Riley.

In fact, Riley never had it so good—mink blanket, three people to wait on him, all the food he can eat and no rent.

The birdbrain boarder is a bird, a 10-day-old robin chick adopted by the Miller family in apartment 307 at 516 Dallas Road.

Nicknamed Henry by Julie Miller, 23, the chick is led on a leash by Mrs. Margaret Miller, Julie and Jim, 18.

"It's the first time I've been a mother," Julie said last night, feeding a freshly-washed worm to Henry. "It's rather nice."

Henry and his family lived in the crook of a large tree level with the Miller's third-floor balcony until a neighboring cat pounced on the nest a few days ago.

Henry was knocked out of the nest and fell 30 feet to the ground as the Millers watched helplessly. They ran downstairs and picked him up and Julie climbed an extension ladder to get the empty nest.

Since then Henry's nest has reposed on top of a huge brandy snifter and the Millers have spent most of their spare time digging worms in a neighbor's yard.

For the first few days the Millers fed Henry every time he squeaked—about once every 20 minutes, round the clock. But they've decided to skip the night feedings.

"Robins don't feed their young at night," Julie said.

Henry's parents visit the Millers' apartment each morning but so far they have refused to go near Henry. "They sit and talk with worms in their mouths but they won't feed him."

This Henry Miller may never write a book but it's a fair bet that his foster parents could.

Monday Opening Day

Jaycees, Carnies Rush
Preparations at Fair

By HARVEY SHEPHERD

Jaycees and midway carnies were making feverish preparations yesterday for the week-long Victoria Exhibition which begins Monday.

Jaycees were stringing lights, arranging booths, building a special dance floor north of the Victoria Curling Rink and performing a thousand and one other tasks to get ready for the week-long fair Monday through Saturday.

Workers from Washington State were setting up a bigger-and-better-than-e-ver midway across a section of Blanshard Street, blocked off for the duration of the fair at the Arena. West of the Arena, workers had set up a huge big top and were giving last-minute touches to the Dancing Waters fountain display which will be shown in it.

The widely-acclaimed Dancing Waters display and hit parade country singer Jimmie Rodgers will be two of the main attractions. Others include a Polynesian song-and-dance group, the Enchanters, Songhees Indians barbecuing salmon and likely carving a totem pole, and a wide range of exhibits.

Passes Mean Prizes

Another enticement will be sale of weekly passes, entitling the holders to participate in nightly draws for valuable merchandise prizes and a draw at the end of the week for a 1963 Ford Galaxie sedan.

The wide range of exhibits will include colored underwater films of marine life shown free by Pacific Marine Sports of Victoria and Victoria artist Peggy Walton Packard making and selling portraits of persons.

Robinson's Sporting Goods will have a hunting display where the public will be invited to try their skill with bows and arrows. The Seanch Inlet Boatmen's Association will show people how to cut herring and rig tackle.

Victoria dog handler Michael Williams will give twice-daily working demonstrations of gun dogs and sheep dogs.

Monday will be children's day at the fair. Thursday will be a second kiddies' day and will feature 4-H demonstrations and judging in the afternoon and evening.

Exhibition doors open at the Arena and Curling Rink at 2 p.m. daily Monday through Friday and at 10 a.m. on Saturday.

Times Set for Shows

But at 1:30 p.m. Monday there will be judging of Ayrshire cattle at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday judging of Jerseys and at 1:30 p.m. Friday judging of Holsteins. Shorthorns will be judged at 6:30 p.m. Friday.

The Enchanters' show will appear daily at 3 p.m., 8:45 p.m. and 10:45 p.m. on the Curling Rink stage. The Rodgers show will be daily at 3:30 p.m. and 10 p.m. on the Arena stage. Mr. Williams' dog exhibition will be daily at 4 p.m. and 8:45 p.m. in the agricultural show ring.

The Alisa Victoria pageant will be nightly on the arena stage at 7:30 p.m. Two contestants will appear nightly until they all appear Saturday night when Miss Victoria of 1963 will be crowned.

The weekly pass draw will be nightly at 11 p.m. and there will be nightly dancing from 9 to 11 p.m. on the north side of the curling rink to the music of the Pharaohs.

The exhibition will be officially opened by the present Miss Victoria, Miss Synnove Petersen, at 9:55 p.m. Monday.

Jaycees last night said that because of last-minute cancellations a few exhibit booths have not been taken up. Firms wanting to rent booths should get in touch with Ken Klid, GR 7-2311.

In Calgary

Hotelman
Dies at 63

A man who, in the words of his former boss, "has done more for the Empress Hotel than any salesman has ever done," died suddenly Saturday while on the job in Calgary.

Charles Moore, 63, Empress convention manager, was stricken suddenly, apparently with a heart attack, while on a B.C. government-sponsored goodwill tour aimed at bringing tourists to Victoria.

Mr. Moore had just completed 20 years with the Empress and was 62 Friday.

Cyril Chapman, who worked with Mr. Moore for 8½ years until Mr. Chapman's retirement as Empress manager, last night paid tribute to Mr. Moore's energy and enthusiasm, and to his contribution to the Empress and Victoria.

"He liked people and people liked him," Mr. Chapman said. "He could sell a convention and then come back and run it," Mr. Chapman said.

CHARLES MOORE
... on job

"He was a fine man and a great man for the hotel."

Born in Brandon, Man., Mr. Moore worked for a bank and a Winnipeg hotel before joining the Royal Alexandra Hotel in Winnipeg to begin some 33 year's service with Canadian Pacific Hotels.

He also worked at the Palliser Hotel in Calgary and the Banff Springs Hotel.

Mr. Moore had been in charge of conventions at the Empress for more than 10 years.

He is survived by his widow and a son David in Victoria and by other relatives elsewhere. Funeral arrangements have not been completed.

Food Stall
Needs Aid

Surplus Food Stall will be called upon to supply food for about 150 families Saturday, but the cupboards are bare, convector Mrs. E. E. Harper said yesterday.

Donors can telephone Mrs. Harper at her home, 3688 Patricia Bay Highway, GR 4-1750, to arrange for pickup of food for the needy.

Summer Schedules
For Ferries Soon

Ferries linking lower Vancouver Island with the mainland will switch to summer schedules beginning with B.C. government ferries May 17 and ending with Washington State Sidney-Anacortes ferries June 7.

Black Ball ferries will begin summer schedules between Victoria and Port Angeles June 1 and CPR summer service between Victoria and Seattle will begin May 20.

Between May 17 and Sept. 30 B.C. government ferries will leave both Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen every hour on the hour from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m.

From June 7 to Sept. 3 Washington State Ferries will make four departures daily each from Sidney and Anacortes.

Ferries will leave Sidney at 7 a.m., 11:30 a.m., 2 p.m. and 5:20 p.m., arriving at Anacortes at 10:40 a.m., 1:50 p.m., 5:40 p.m. and 8:10 p.m.

The Black Ball ferry Mv. Coho will leave Victoria and Port Angeles four times daily June 1 to Sept. 15. She now makes two trips daily each way.

She will leave Victoria at 6 a.m., 10:15 a.m., 2:30 p.m. and 6:30 p.m. and will leave Port Angeles at 8 a.m., 12:15 p.m., 4:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.

The 6 a.m. sailing out of Victoria will not operate Thursdays and the 8:30 p.m. sailing out of Port Angeles will not operate Wednesdays.

The CPR ship CPSS Princess Marguerite will provide daily steamer service between Victoria and Seattle May 20 to Sept. 28. She will leave Seattle at 11:30 a.m., arriving at Victoria at 11:30 a.m. and departing for Seattle at 5:30 p.m.

Sun Has Good Chance

Lots of sun is predicted for Victoria Sunday, but clouds forming late in the day promise a storm gathering over the North Pacific, the weather office said last night.

"But there is still hope the storm may be dispersed off over the ocean," the spokesman said. This would mean there's a good chance the present warm weather and sunshine will continue.

Navy Day
Draws
4,000

Nearly 4,000 persons attended Navy Day activities here yesterday.

There were no mishaps and everything ran smoothly during the 1:30 to 3 p.m. open house at naval installations in Victoria and at Patricia Bay Airport, said a navy spokesman.

There were 2,494 visitors at HMC Dockyard and 1,400 at Patricia Bay Airport.

TAKEN ON TOURS

Ships from all major squadrons were open to the public, visitors were taken on tours of Esquimalt Harbor aboard navy harbor craft, and a number of flying displays were given.

Earlier in the day, 18 officer pilots and four aircraft of VC922 were inspected at Patricia Bay Airport by Commodore P. D. Taylor, Hamilton, commanding officer of naval divisions.

The Navy Day turnout compared favorably with the interest shown last year, said the navy spokesman.

They Can Be Independent

By BRUCE COLEGRAVE

Eighty children with a great zest for life are proving at Queen Alexandra Solarium that rehabilitation, self-sufficiency and independence are possible to almost anyone.

Their reaction when their first enter is a bit of homesickness but in four or five days they are part of the family.

Quite a family it is, 80 youngsters from the newborn to 12 years of age.

"Practically any child can be rehabilitated and made independent, self-sufficient and self-sustaining," said John Holdstock, administrator of the Solarium at Gordon Head, "and that is the purpose of the Solarium."

The fact rehabilitation of patients since the Solarium opened in 1927 at its old Mill Bay location has been 98 per cent effective is ample proof. Although the children are crippled, they lead a very full life during their stay, which averages 312 days a patient.

They attend school and follow the same curriculum as other schools. For the younger ones there is also a kindergarten.

The children are kept active with sports too, playing basketball from wheelchairs and with decorated wheelchairs.

When it comes to beachcombing, the children are experts. They have, at their own doorstep, Finnelly Beach with a ramp for access.

The camp was built from funds supplied through the Solarium Derby organized by the Victoria-Saanich Inlet Anglers' Association.

It is not all play—there is the serious business of providing the treatments necessary to help the children back to a self-sufficient role in the community and also the big job of running the Solarium.

There are 11 medical staff members, all specialists who give their services free.

There are also 10 qualified nurses plus a number of nurses aides and a Solarium Junior League which numbers about 50.

Members of the Junior League help raise money for the Solarium and also visit the patients.

All splints and braces are made on the premises by D. C. Newell, with the Solarium for 25 years. In the treatment centre there is equipment for physiotherapy, hydrotherapy and occupational therapy.

Treatment does not necessarily end when a patient leaves. They may attend a follow-up clinic held every Saturday at the Solarium.

Public Asked But Once

The annual Shower of Dimes, now in progress and held every year in May, is the only direct appeal to the public for funds for the Queen Alexandra Solarium.

It consists of a tag day, mail campaign and the familiar umbrellas around town and must raise $172,000.

Administrator John Holdstock explains the annual cost of running the Solarium is $300,000 of which the government supplies $120,000 and the patients $80,000.

"We try to raise at least one month's maintenance during the Shower, which amounts to $25,000," he said.

To Be Married in Calgary

Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Spivak, Calgary, Alta., wish to announce the engagement of their only daughter, Marilyn Judith, to Dr. Harold Albert Menkes, second son of Mr. and Mrs. Max Menkes of Victoria. The wedding will take place in Calgary on Sunday, June 3.

Meeker Shows who have brought the grand midway to the fair and Mrs. Meeker from Tacoma, Wash., Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Paquette of Edmonton and Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Doman of Duncan.

Const. and Mrs. Miller Motoring to Calgary

Following their marriage yesterday afternoon in St. Matthias Anglican Church, Const. Gerald Wayne Miller, RCMP, and Mrs. Miller are motoring to Calgary for their honeymoon.

The bride is the former Gail Adela Wood, daughter of Mrs. C. M. Wood, Victoria. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Miller, Calgary. Rev. Angus Cameron of Lundbreck officiated and the bride's cousin, Mr. Ken Smith, sang the "Wedding Prayer."

White gladioli decorated the church. The bride was given in marriage by her grandfather, Mr. A. W. Roberts. She chose an exquisite full-length gown of white silk organza posed over taffeta. A sash in neckline topped the fitted bodice. Lace inserts accented the full skirt, which tapered to a slight train. Her misty eye-length veil was held by a dainty pillbox. Gardenias and stephanotis were in her bouquet.

Tarquoise peau de soie gowns, toning pill box hats trimmed with tulle and bouquets of stephanotis and white feathered carnations were chosen by the attendants.

They were maid of honor, Miss Pamela May, the bride's cousin; bridesmaid, Miss Barbara Painter, of Duncan, and bridesmaids, Mrs. W. D. Unwin and Mrs. S. E. Buckley, of Vancouver.

Const. Don McLay, Cloverdale, B.C., was best man and Const. Sid Slater, Mallardville; Grant Ward, North Surrey, and Don McIvor, Cloverdale, ushered guests to their seats. Both the groom and his attendants were in RCMP dress uniform.

A. J. Roberts proposed the toast to his niece at a reception in Oak Bay Beach Hotel. Leaving on a honeymoon motoring trip to Calgary, the bride donned a pink Italian knit suit, boning hat of straw and tulle, white boucle coat, black accessories and white gardenia corsage.

Newlyweds will make their home in New Westminster.

Home at Sooke For Newlyweds

A pretty dress of white satin cotton was chosen by Bernice Evelyn Owen for her marriage Friday evening to Mr. Kenneth Stephen Priske. White eyelet embroidery accented the frock. Sleeves were three-quarter length and the bodice was styled with a high round neckline. The bride's sister, Mrs. L. Eve made the gown. Her veil was shoulder length and she carried red roses.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Owen, Sooke Road and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Priske, Colwood. The double ring marriage took place in Knox Presbyterian Church with Rev. Allen Beaton officiating.

Mr. Jack Lindley was soloist, accompanied by Mrs. Florence Ackerman.

Blue floral, everglaze dress with full skirts and square necklines were chosen by all the attendants. Mrs. L. Eve was matron of honor, Miss Patsy Owen, bridesmaid, Miss Suzanne Owen, junior bridesmaid and little Dora Eve was flower girl. Mrs. Eve made the dresses.

Mr. Eddy Eve Jr. was best man and Mr. Ross Musfeldt and Fred Priske ushered guests.

Mr. Harry Vogel proposed the toast to his niece at a reception held in the bride's parents' home. The cake was baked by Mrs. L. Eve and decorated by Leo Taygerman. Mr. Ron Burnside provided music.

Following a motoring trip up the island, Mr. and Mrs. Priske will make their home on Kaituma Road, Sooke. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Vogel came from Vancouver for the wedding and Mr. and Mrs. W. Adamson travelled from Campbell River.

Ann Landers

Dear Ann: Ten years ago when my husband moved his offices into a new building he asked me to do the decorating. I worked awfully hard but the results were worth it. I used walnut paneling, beiges, browns, and burnt orange for contrast. Everyone remarked on the quiet elegance and the atmosphere of dignity and restfulness. Friends suggested I go in for decorating as a career.

Several weeks ago my husband mentioned re-doing his office. His secretary is putting to work some of her ideas, he said.

Yesterday when I saw the finished office I almost fainted. It looks like a Miami nightclub. I said nothing but I'm sure he sensed my disappointment. Should I come right out and tell him his office is a monstrosity and that I'd be happy to re-do them for him?

He seems to think his secretary did a "sensational" job. Please advise.—OUTRAGED.

Dear Outraged: Say nothing. Any comment from you would sound like sour grapes.

Get busy on a decorating project at home. It will help to keep your mind off the office. And stay away from there. If you don't see it, it won't bother you so much.

Dear Ann Landers: Mother has always run my life. I thought when I married she'd stop, but no such luck.

Mother is a bright woman and I'm certain much of her advice is sound. I resist it, however, just because it comes from her. Now, we are having a violent disagreement and I'd like your views.

Our 3½-year-old son has been walking and talking since he was 11 months old. He's unusually active and I'm exhausted trying to keep him from destroying the house.

I've lost 20 pounds since this child was born. My doctor suggested nursery school, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., not only to give me relief, but to keep the boy busy. My mother says young women today are running away from their children and dodging their responsibilities by sticking their pre-school children in day nurseries. She says this produces insecure, rejected children. Is mother right or wrong?—NO MATCH FOR MOM.

Dear No Match: For every parent who is running an adult life there must be an adult who is permitting it. Domination is a two-way proposition.

Day nurseries are excellent for some children and not good

President Says:

VON Can't Expand Service By Fund-Raising Appeals

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP)—Joseph Jeffrey of London, Ont., president of the Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada, told the organization's 65th annual meeting the VON will not be able to expand its services by depending on fund-raising appeals.

He said the order must look at its financial situation "more realistically" and combine all possible sources—federal, provincial and municipal—for regular financial support.

In the past, fund-raising appeals to provide revenue for general purposes have been held every five years and the next appeal will begin by January, 1964, he said.

Mr. Jeffrey said both the VON head office staff in Ottawa and the field staff must be expanded. He asked delegates for their "wholehearted support" of an increase in the professional service charges for the head office to five cents from 2½ cents a visit made by the branches. The increase was decided upon in closed sessions of the meeting earlier Friday.

Jean Leask of Ottawa, VON director-in-chief, told the meeting "a new role—a new set of relationships" was offered to the order by the expansion of home care. The order can either provide leadership in home care programs or can provide skills for plans coordinated by other agencies, she said in her annual report.

She reported that last year, 26 of the order's 117 branches had developed a referral or liaison program for home care with one or more hospitals in their area, making a total of about 50 branches providing this service.

Nursing services for community-organized home care programs in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Moose Jaw, Sask., are provided by the VON which has also been asked to act as administering agent for the establishment of similar programs in six other communities, Miss Leask said.

The VON branch in Nanaimo, B.C., provided 26 homes with housekeeping services through a new program designed to "maintain household routine and family living in times of stress," she said.

Guest speaker Emille G. Sargent, executive director of the Visiting Nurses' Association of Detroit, said her organization employs 40 women called "home aids" for housekeeping services which are in great demand.

Practicing a gay village scene are Freddy, with his fiddle, Graham Ashworth and the local folk of Bergen. Behind Freddy are Grieg's father and mother, Tony Wilkins and Margaret Duff, and to Be Presented

Song of Norway

May 20, 21, 22

Well known pianist for the production is Lorraine Travis. — (Harry Fillion.)

The "Song of Norway," an operetta based on the life and music of composer Edvard Grieg, will be presented by the Victoria Operatic Society on May 20 to 22 inclusive in the Royal Theatre. The curtain will go up at 8:15 on each of the three evening performances.

The operetta on the life of the composer is from a book by Homer Curran and the music and lyrics were adapted by R. Wright and George Forest.

Lt.-Col. V. Mills is stage director and the musical director is Frank Slater.

Julius Sather; middle row, Blanche Hopper, Marge Myhre, Margareta Gilstein and Ordie Schmidt and Ruby Jorde, Asle Jorde and Eleanor Gilstein are in the front.

Arch rivals and their escorts meet in a scene from Song of Norway, the story of Grieg's life. At left is the famous opera singer, Louisa Giovanni, later Grieg's patroness, played by Leona Hanley. Beside her is Count Peppi le Loup, her husband, Clive Yoxall. Adelina, the ballerina, Lydia

Going through a rehearsal of the conservatory scene, which takes place in Copenhagen, are Jim Mead-Robbins, who plays the part of author, Henrik Ibsen, with his admirers. Holding out their autograph books for Ibsen are Jean Norrie, Hedwig; Joan Stallybrass, Elvira and standing, Wendy Dutton, Margareta. Len Crookston and Dirk Van Maanen, both professors, look on with Evelyn Rogers, Miss Norden.

Pink, White Color Theme

Pink and white theme was chosen by Brenda Lynn Griffith for her marriage to Donald Gordon May in St. Patrick's Church, Oak Bay. Pink tulips and white carnations decorated the church for the ceremony at which Fr. M. Costello officiated. Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Griffith, 1039 Pemberton Road and Mrs. E. L. May, 3161 Earl Grey Street.

Entering the church on the arm of her father, the bride wore a gown of white chiffon over satin, styled with fitted bodice, high neckline, long sleeves, and full skirt. Her bouffant fingertip veil misted from a tiara of pearls and rhinestones. Only jewelry was a single strand of pearls, gift of the groom. She carried a colonial bouquet of white feathered carnations and pink roses.

Miss Patricia J. Brown attended the bride wearing a pink organza and satin gown that had accent of lace appliques on bodice and skirt. Her butterfly veil was held in by a pink rose and her bouquet was white feathered carnations.

Walter B. Slocumb was best man and ushers were the principal's brothers William G. Griffith and Guy May.

Pink roses topped the wedding cake and pink and white azaleas completed decor at a reception in the home of the bride's parents.

Arvett A. Smith who came from Nanaimo with Mrs. Smith for the wedding, proposed the toast to his niece. Other special guests were the bride's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George Griffith and the groom's grandmother, Mrs. E. Fisher.

As her going-away outfit the bride chose a pink wool suit, white accessories and pink rose corsage. After a honeymoon trip to Calgary, the newlyweds will make their home in Victoria.

Picture perfect is the bride's chapel-length dress, left, designed in norganza with a hand-cut rosette lace trim on the bodice and at the side of the skirt. At right, the silhouette for '63 is reflected in a slim sheath gown with detachable overskirt in norganza. The overskirt falls free and is trimmed in Bourbon lace.

Wedding Gowns Go Convertible

MONTREAL — People who think they're seeing things next summer may be right. Wedding gowns this season appear to be acquiring a now-you-see-it, now-you-don't look.

It's all part of the trend across Canada towards greater practicality in wedding gowns. Brides these days want to wear their wedding gowns for more than the ceremony.

The convertible look — providing the bride with a two-way wardrobe — has become the 1963 pace-setter in wedding fashion, according to one of Canada's largest manufacturers of bridal wear. Instead of putting her gown into mothballs after the ceremony, she may appear at her first dinner party in a gown with shoe-string straps, by presto! removing the bolero top and the flowing overskirt of her wedding dress.

What's more, she has a lovely gown in which to entertain the first guests in her home after the honeymoon or to go dancing at the country club.

This doesn't mean that today's modern bride isn't looking for the traditional portrait look. She might, for instance, wear the graceful directoire coat, shaped with a bolero front and ending in yards of lace that flow into an elegant train. At the reception, she simply removes the coat to reveal a slim sheath or controlled silhouette gown.

Of course, not all brides are tradition-minded. Many favor the "little girl" look, perhaps in a chapel-length dress with tiny puffed sleeves. In 1963, many also prefer a shorter veil with a tiny baby ribbon pillbox instead of the usual crown and veil. For the reception, the "apron front" of the dress is removed, revealing a simple, short dancing frock.

Paris certainly has been a strong influence on wedding fashion this season. The sleeve is definitely "in." The long, finger-tip sleeve of yesterday is still popular, although now sleeves are also pleated, three-quarter length, capped or "little girl" puffed.

The demand for new silhouettes and fabrics also makes bridal fashions new and exciting. There are gowns with just a suggestion of color or tinted lace in the trimming. Portrait silhouettes are varied — controlled, sheath or traditional. Fabrics now are in satapau, norganza, cotton or silk, all lightweight and easy to care for, retaining their shape.

But the biggest news remains the convertible gowns and indications are that, because of its practicality, it will be news for years to come.

TORONTO (CP)—Mrs. A. S. Curr of Toronto was elected president of the Western Missionary Society (Western Division) of the Presbyterian Church in Canada at the organization's annual council meeting.

Leslie Evenden Bride Of James Kirk Bryson

Baskets of white stocks and pink anemones decorated St. Luke's Anglican Church last night for the marriage of Leslie Joan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leo E. Evenden, Panshurst Road, and Mr. James Kirk Bryson, son of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Bryson, son of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Bryson, Midgard Avenue.

Ven. C. E. F. Wolff officiated and Mr. Robert Faulds was soloist.

The bride was lovely in a portrait gown of mauve de soie satin. The bodice featured a sweetheart neckline touched with lace and sequin appliques. The full skirt swept to a flowing train. Her pouffy silk illusion veil held by a pearl tiara and she carried a cascade of white roses and gardenias. Her only jewelry was a double strand pearl necklace.

Mrs. David Johnston, matron of honor, chose a pink chiffon over taffeta dress with scoop neckline and full skirt. Mrs. Herb Kobley and Miss Gail Smith were in identical pink chiffon and taffeta outfits styled with draped necklines. Shoes and headpieces were toning and they carried pink and white carnations.

Flower girls, Cindy Bennett, Wendy Cairns and Suzanne Bryson were in pretty white frocks with pink washes. Cirls of pink carnations were in their hair and in their baskets.

Mr. David Johnston was best man and Tony Burns carried the rings for the double-ring ceremony. Mr. Douglas Coppin and Mr. Fred Latham were ushers. A three-tiered cake flanked by pink tapers and red roses centred the table at the reception in the Cavalier Room at the Colony Motor Hotel, Mr. J. B. Priestley proposed the toast.

Leaving on a honeymoon to the interior, the bride changed to a camellia red Blin and Blin, semi-fitted suit with white hat and gloves and patent bag and shoes. She chose a gardenia corsage. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Bryson will live at 4453 Casa Linda Drive.

Medical Witchery Succeeds

Dr. Raymond Price of the trans-cultural psychiatric section at McGill University engaged in field work with native healers of the Yoruba culture group practicing in Nigerian towns and villages.

Dr. Price said one thing in favor of the witch doctor is his personalized attention.

Interviewed after his return from Africa, Dr. Price said one thing in favor of the witch doctor is his personalized attention.

MOVES RIGHT IN

"When a Nigerian mental patient reports for treatment to a witch doctor he moves right into the doctor's home, often bringing his wife or daughter to help with basic nursing and food preparation."

"This close relationship with the healer is in marked contrast with large Canadian mental hospitals where only a few psychiatrists are available for several hundred patients."

COUPLE OF HUTS

"A native healer may have as few as six patients, living in his home or, in the case of overactive persons, in a couple of huts in the yard where they are sheltered for the first 48 hours until sedatives quiet them."

"The mental health programs of many developing countries should make the fullest use of existing indigenous mental treatment facilities."

U.S. Reserves Reorganized

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Army has announced the reorganization of the army national guard and reserve divisions.

Under the plan, eight national guard and reserve divisions were reduced to much smaller brigades and 731 smaller units were eliminated so reserves could be brought on active duty quicker.

On Festive Days

Kimono Comeback
Slated in Japan

TOKYO (Reuters) — Modern Japanese girls, who in past years have considered the kimono outdated, are rediscovering its beauty.

While foreign travellers may still not see many women wearing the kimono on the streets of Tokyo, this picturesque Japanese attire prevails today on festive occasions such as New Year.

SILK PRICES UP

The "come-back" of the kimono is believed to be the main cause of a 50-per-cent rise in raw silk prices here during the last year. Exports of raw silk also increased substantially, but shippers say that the recent soaring prices of Japanese raw silk are scaring overseas importers away.

In the years immediately following the Second World War, the gaily colored kimono was chiefly worn by geisha girls but now women students, office girls and young wives are returning to it.

Tokyo department stores devoted half of their floor space to kimono, and courses are held on how to wear and care for it.

One leading department store reports kimono sales increased by 20 per cent in volume and 50 per cent in value in the last few months.

NEW SOCIETY

Plans are even being made to create an international kimono society under the slogan "let's meet 1964 Olympics with kimono." The society will urge Japanese women to wear the kimono when they meet foreigners or travel overseas.

Wool is also becoming an important material for the production of kimonos for everyday wear.

Montreal

Getting Gargoyles

MONTREAL (CP)—Jordi Bonet, Spanish-born Montreal ceramist, is working on eight massive ceramic panels in a bold relief design reminiscent of medieval gargoyles—an art form seldom seen today.

The panels are to adorn La Grande Salle in Place des Arts, Montreal's new centre for the performing arts scheduled to open in the fall.

Designs on the panels, each eight feet wide and three feet high, will depict various aspects of music and the theatre. The relief ranges in depth from four to 12 inches.

The finished panels will be placed over the eight entrances to the orchestra seats of the new concert hall-opera house.

The technique involves spreading specially prepared clay on tables set on trestles. The clay has worked into it a substantial amount of flinty-hard fragments which give the baked ceramic strength.

The clay not being worked is covered with a plastic sheet to keep it moist while the rest is shaped. When a panel is completed it is broken into smaller pieces for baking in the kiln. After baking the pieces are re-assembled and cemented together. Pigments are worked into the clay and take their final colors in the baking.

Bonet, born in Barcelona in 1932, studied art until he was 17 and then set out to see the world. He moved to Montreal in 1954.

Reds Fail to Woo
Chinese in India

By RUKMINI DEVI
Canadian Press Correspondent

BOMBAY (CP)—The Communist Chinese government has been trying unsuccessfully to win over the Chinese minority in India.

Despite strong anti-Chinese sentiment that has developed here since Peking's attack on India last fall, fewer than 1,000 of the 20,000 Chinese nationals in India have accepted repatriation to their homeland.

CAMPS INSPECTED

Two Chinese ships recently left from the south Indian port of Madras with 900 Chinese nationals, including 300 children. The adults had been informed by the Indian government for pro-Chinese espionage activities. Another 700 Chinese are to be repatriated and New Delhi is in correspondence with Peking on shipping facilities.

Of the nearly 3,000 Chinese nationals arrested soon after the invasion, about half have refused to be repatriated though they were rounded up for pro-Communist activities. Many are said to be asking Indian authorities to give them another chance to remain in India.

REFUSE DEMANDS

The Chinese government has been pressing New Delhi to provide it with exact information about the number of Chinese internees wanting to be repatriated and their full names. The Indian government has refused. It has pointed out that since some internees have changed their minds about repatriation it is not possible to give Peking their names in advance.

Another Chinese demand India has rejected is that officials of the Chinese embassy in India be allowed to interrogate the internees to find out their political affiliations. The Indian stand has been that the choice should be made by each internee without pressure from outside.

The Indian government has, however, permitted officials of the International Red Cross to inspect the internees' camp. The Red Cross reported conditions in the camp were "quite satisfactory."

Meanwhile, the Overseas Chinese Association of India has reaffirmed its loyalty to India and denounced the Chinese invasion last October.

Langford Plea:

Lake Plugged
—Clear Ditch!

By JACK FRY

Angry Langford Lake residents are demanding the provincial highways department clear a drainage ditch they claim is responsible for the popular swimming lake becoming an unpleasant pea soup-like algae fog.

Biologists disagree on what is causing the green algae which has filled the lake, but lakeside residents maintain it is caused by fertilizer pumped as floodwater from an adjacent farm.

Residents claim that, if a drainage ditch at the west end of the lake were cleared of debris, the lake level would drop and there would be no floodwater to pump from the farmer's field.

A culvert placed under the road during new Island Highway construction would have to be lowered.

Provincial regional biologist David Hurn, of Nanaimo, who conducted a survey of the lake in 1959 and 1960, says he suspects the algae is caused by detergents which seep into the lake and build up because they never dissolve.

But it will be a number of years before the concentration reaches a point where this can be proved, he says.

Other provincial biologists, based in Victoria, discount his theory and say fertilizer is a

You can't see palms of your hands in half-inch of water because of algae in Langford Lake. —(Jack Fry)

nutrient which encourages growth of algae.

They say detergents are not a nutrient at all and that, if anything, they might hinder the growth of algae in a lake the same as they hinder the operation of a septic tank.

Algae was thick in the lake in 1959, 1960 and 1961.

After repeated, fruitless requests to the government to clear the drainage ditch, the Frank Ray family partially cleared it themselves in 1961.

The district highways engineer supplied dynamite and blasting caps, and a back hoe was rented through contributions from lakeside residents.

No Problem Last Year

Farmer Aubrey Hull said he did not pump water into the lake from his 40-acre field in 1962, after the ditch had been cleared by the Rays.

There was no algae problem last year.

Mr. Hull said he thought it was "worth a try" to clear the ditch because it might help reduce the amount of algae.

He felt the government should do it, rather than the lakeside residents, because "drainage is the government's baby."

The highways department

has steadfastly refused to clean the ditch for fear it would set a precedent.

But the old public works department did clean the ditch in 1948, and after that the algae problem which had been building up disappeared for more than a decade until the ditch again became plugged.

When the lake is high, nearly all of Mr. Hull's 40-acre field is flooded. Water from the heavily fertilized field runs into a ditch from where it is pumped directly into the lake.

The lake level is extremely high this year, and Mr. Hull said he "started pumping about a week ago." The drainage ditch is plugged again.

It was nearly a week ago that lakeside residents noticed a tremendous buildup of algae and started complaining.

"I think if the ditch was lowered and some of the water run off there would be less algae," said Mrs. Ray.

Regional fishery biologist Hurn said he thought a lowering of the lake level would only aggravate the algae condition because the shallower lake gets the warmer the water becomes and the more algae will grow there.

Biologists in Victoria agree.

Mum's
Day
Today

This is Mother's Day and, from all indications, a big day for gifts—a business was booming in downtown and suburban stores throughout Greater Victoria Saturday. Cards in particular sold well; most racks had wide-open spaces.

Mother's Day isn't just today, it's three—yesterday when everyone was doing last-minute shopping, today when mother reigns supreme, and tomorrow.

Then, all the mothers lovingly given stockings that are too long, nightgowns too small and handbags that don't go with anything, take them back to be exchanged.

Mink, Worms

Henry Lucky
Chick

By TED SHACKLEFORD

There's a potbellied bird-brain boarding in an apartment on Dallas Road and he's leading the life of Riley.

In fact, Riley never had it so good—mink blanket, three people to wait on him, all the food he can eat and no rent. The bird-brain boarder is a bird, a 10-day-old robin chick adopted by the Miller family in apartment 307 at 516 Dallas Road.

Nicknamed Henry by Julie Miller, 23, the chick is fed on shifts by Mrs. Margaret Miller, Julie and Jim, 18.

YOUNG MOTHER

"It's the first time I've been a mother," Julie said last night, feeding a freshly-washed worm to Henry. "It's rather nice."

Henry and his family lived in the crook of a large tree level with the Millers' third-floor balcony until a neighboring cat pounced on the nest a few days ago.

OUT OF NEST

Henry was knocked out of the nest and fell 30 feet to the ground as the Millers watched helplessly. They ran downstairs and picked him up and Julie climbed an extension ladder to get the empty nest.

Since then Henry's nest has reposed on top of a huge brandy snifter and the Millers have spent most of their spare time digging worms in a neighbor's yard.

SKIP NIGHT FEEDINGS

For the first few days the Millers fed Henry every time he squeaked—about once every 20 minutes, round the clock. But they've decided to skip the night feedings.

"Robins don't feed their young at night," Julie said. "Besides, look at that tummy..."

Henry's parents visit the Millers' apartment each morning but so far they have refused to go near Henry. "They sit and talk with worms in their mouths but they won't feed him."

This Henry Miller may never write a book but it's a fair bet that his foster parents could.

The Monster Kodiaks Kill the Cubs So Two Grizzled Hunters Set Out

To KILL the KILLERS

There is no age limit to adventure. Take Wills and Joe Hunter. They were crowding 60 when they got an idea that would top all their hunting adventures. With patience born of foothills philosophy they made a decision. Never mind if it took years to plan and prepare an epic of daring. Just so long as they give it a try. And, by golly, they did.

When the Hunters entered southern Alberta from Utah back in 1903 they found a playground fitting for sons who were natural shots and good horsemen. Here was a territory of unfenced prairie, foothills and mountains to treat as their backyard. The growing boys paired off for work and play. Joe and Wills hunted Alberta from the Montana border to the other side of Jasper. They filled their home with trophies.

"I like to get out there on my own," said Joe, "with just my gun and my wits trying to track down some animal. Especially a predator. There he is on his own range and maybe I'm in strange country. Just him and me. I'm ready to match wits like this any time. Sometimes he wins. Sometimes I do. There's nothing in the world like it."

Gradually subdivisions and settlements sneaked in and surrounded them and first thing they knew, when it was time to put the machinery away and go hunting, the sport was all fenced in. There were gates through posted land and a fellow had to take the highway and detour around regulations to get near the game tucked away in back of beyond.

Besides they had specimens of everything from grizzly to big horn sheep, and even a wolf and coyote stuffed and mounted in the living room as well. There was nothing left to challenge their instinct.

"By golly," said Wills, "I think me and Joe should go up there to Alaska and get us a Kodiak bear and then we'd have everything we can hunt on this continent. I hear it's the biggest animal left."

Seven Years' Planning

Once decided, the long winter evenings were crowded with close reading of sports magazines for nearly seven years. They sent away for folders, and they ordered guns.

Wills bought a standard Winchester 300 magnum with a Mosler four-power sight. Joe got in touch with Roy Weatherby of South Gate, California. Each ordered a 257 Weatherby conversion magnum, one with a Lyman Alaskan Challenger, the other with a Zeiss Zeilvier 'scope sight. Joe also ordered a Weatherby 300 conversion magnum with a Bosch & Lomb four-power 'scope. The rifles were made-to-measure.

The Weatherby guns were wildcats so the hand-loaded shells were processed in a home-made outfit they kept in their bedroom. The scale, made from the balance wheel of an old clock, was very accurate.

When they answered the advertisement of a guide in Alaska, they had a letter guaranteeing them a shot at 200 yards or less at a trophy-size Kodiak bear. The hunt would cost them $1,000 each for two weeks of sport, with all expenses paid, travelling in a 45-foot cruiser. A folder said the bear was a dangerous and thrilling adversary, the largest flesh-eating animal on earth.

It was going to cost them nearly $1,000 to get there by air, and when you figured up the equipment they were accumulating, it would represent quite an investment. So Bill Poland, the guide and outfitter, had to guarantee them a good specimen. But they just had to "go get one of them bears" and after corresponding through the winter of 1946 they booked for a spring hunt leaving Kodiak Island on May 2.

First Flight

The end of April they boarded a plane for the first time in their lives at Lethbridge and in a matter of minutes were covering their old hunting grounds en route to Vancouver. From Seattle they flew to Anchorage in time for breakfast and received the first shock away from home.

"We went to the hotel," said Joe, "and ordered waffles, ham and eggs and coffee—just ordinary food like you'd get at home except maybe a few dainties on it. But when we got the bill we figured on catching the next plane home. The tally was $10.50."

A light plane took them to Kodiak Island where Bill Poland met them and introduced them to Nick Nekeroff, part-Eskimo guide, Herb Carpenter, general hand on the boat, and the 45-foot cruiser.

"That boat had everything a man could want for comfort," said Joe, "and she was prettied up right to the hilt."

They cast off and headed for Poland's base camp 90 miles away in the heart of bear country, sighting in their rifles and listening to Bill and Nick describe the bear they were after. The Kodiak was just coming out of hibernation; about a third of the bear population would be in evidence. They were their own worst enemy. Old males killed the cubs. They dwarfed the grizzly. If wounded they were cunning and ferocious killers, particularly if caught in the alders.

In spite of these hazards they were holding their own and every old male killed meant a better chance for the cubs. First thing they do on emerging from hibernation is to head for the ocean and take on a feed of kelp and all the ocean life they can reach. Their feet are tender after the long sleep and bleed easily on the sharp, volcanic rock.

Rifles at Ready

Poland and his guide warned Joe and Wills time and again about having their rifles within reach at all times ashore. Bill and Nick were particularly touchy on this.

"Just a few days before," said Wills, "a top guide and a sportsman who had gone inside a cave, were attacked without warning and a rescue party sent out to find them could not tell which was the sport and which was the guide."

"Kinda bad for business," said Joe.

They finally headed into a large inlet and worked up to the tide flats. This was Bill Poland's main hunting ground. Around them were smaller inlets and rising sheer to elevations of 5,000 feet were the mountains.

The first morning they found bear visible any time during daylight with or without glasses. But any bear wouldn't do. Some sports could shoot from a boat, pump lead like any trigger-happy dude. Not the Hunter boys. When they finally spotted a trophy specimen close to the peak of a mountain, they figured he was worth hunting. So Joe and Wills left with Nick. They arranged signals with the cruiser and, as they climbed, the boat's crew could follow hunters and quarry, send signals indicating the bear's direction.

Kodiak's a Rugged Country

When the climb started in earnest they were mighty glad they had ordered from New York a type of rubber boot used in Korea, for the volcanic rock would tear leather to shreds. Soon they were climbing on hands and knees, pulling up hand over hand in many places. It was a cruel, punishing ordeal for a fit athlete. Wills and Joe, 63 and 61 years, were paying a fancy price for the privilege. And loving it.

Blinded by Snow

When they reached the peak the bear had gone. To make matters worse it started to snow and they couldn't pick up signals from the boat 5,000 feet below them. They sat it out until the storm passed and a pale sun began to warm the scene. Poland with a white flag on a pole indicated their quarry had gone down and around the mountain while they had been climbing. They went after him until they encountered a glacier running from the top of the mountain into the bay.

"There was nothing else to do," said Joe. "We had to try and get over, counting across on our hands, edging sideways for some 300 yards."

Then they ran into snow thawing from underneath. Close to eight feet deep, one minute they'd be hard on top, the next they'd break through, without warning, to the big rocks. After a heroic effort their only reward was to find their quarry had entered a crater was well out of reach.

Joe obstinately made them work to within 450 yards, which he considered a sporting distance but Nick vetoed a shot at such a range with too much chance of leaving a crippled and dangerous animal around.

It was just as hard getting back. In fact Joe and Wills discovered they'd rather be going up than down and were mighty glad to reach the comforts of the big boat.

Next day they grimly set out again searching for a worthy foe. Suddenly they saw something so big they didn't know just what it was. The color was right but the shape puzzled them until Nick became excited.

Bear on the Beach

Actually it was a Kodiak sitting with his back to them about 400 yards away. When it unrolled and started walking, everyone tensed. Nick wheeled the boat for shore and they hit the beach like a team of commandos opening the second front. They dashed around reef rocks waist deep in icy water but when they reached smooth beach there was this old bear walking straight away.

The wind being right, they began to stalk. The bear has a sharp scent but poor eyesight. Nick showed them the technique. When the bear stopped to look back, they dropped and froze. When the Kodiak turned to walk, Nick led them on the run to close the gap until they dropped dead again on the bear's next check. This way they managed to close the gap to 300 yards.

Then their quarry decided to leave the beach for the bush.

Immediately Wills and Joe got their sights on him and as he started up the trail to oblivion they squeezed off two shots. Both bullets slammed into bruin and he rolled back to the beach.

Now he got up and headed for the water, Wills got off another shot which knocked him down again, but he quickly rose and started towards the hunting party, head on.

Joe took careful aim, shot him right between the eyes and he dropped like a stone. It was a beautiful trophy with a live weight of about 1,700 pounds. The hide measured 10 feet 3 inches each way. Nick was pleased with his boys. Not a shot wasted.

Another Quarry

Next morning the little guide found another specimen worthy of these men and three of them left by launch. Landing half a mile from their quarry they stalked for two miles, managing to keep out of sight. By the time they had worked to within 350 yards dusk was settling and they realized if they did not get their bear within minutes they would lose him. It called for a quick shot.

Joe and Wills moved out and up to 300 yards. Two 300 magnums cracked together, Joe's Weatherby and Wills' Winchester. The bear absorbed both bullets and went down but was up again immediately and heading for the bush.

Now he was distinctly dangerous. Wills picked him up next and a shot slowed him. Now Joe was in action, his second shot caught the bear in the left shoulder, the bullet lodged under the right. He was dead when they reached him. They had to leave him until morning after the three men had struggled, rolling him out of reach of water. He was equal in size to the other.

During the stalk they had barely noticed that they had plunged through icy water. At one point during the exciting chase they had waded a river 60 yards wide with rifles high over their heads. The fast water carried chunks of ice which on return was up to their armpits. Backtracking was a strenuous and difficult feat for the tide had come in and the mountainside was so rugged they could not climb clear of the water. It was also pitch black and there was nothing for it but to grit their teeth and wade the two miles to the boat.

Uninviting Sea

The boys from Alberta didn't like the 12 foot waves and the cruiser anchored 1,500 yards out in rough water. They would rather fork a bronk any day than ride the launch into that sea. Joe was all for making a Siwash camp until daylight. But Nick liked his comfort and insisted they make the trip.

Next morning they skinned their second bear, salted the hides, pulled anchor and headed for Poland's cabin situated prettily in a fine bay. Here they hung their skins, rested and savored the comforts of camp. After all that excitement it was hard to relax.

"Where's this tackle-busting fish you got to offer the sports?" asked Joe. And Bill took the cruiser around to Larsen Bay where he tied up at a cannery pier, hiked them 11 miles through snow willow and muskeg on a tough trail up the Uyak River. It was worth the trouble when they began pulling out steelhead. Joe set aside a 30-pounder he wanted to take home as proof.

"Anybody up here got a machine that can sharp freeze this for the trip home?" he asked. They froze it, and sharp and he boarded the plane for home with the fish under his arm.

They had been out 10 days, half the time hunting bear. They had spotted 45 adult bear and several pairs of cubs.

It cost them $125 to get each hide tanned at Penticton.

At 68 and 66 you think they are ready to call it quits?

"Wills and me are in touch with an agency in New York," said Joe. "We'd kind of like to try one of those safaris in Africa. I hanker for a crack at a leopard and maybe a lion."

"I want to try and get a tiger," said Wills. Someone pointed out they had to go to India for tiger.

"Well," said Wills, "while we're down there we might as well run over to India and get one."

MOST PEOPLE PREFER to see bears without molesting them, and this black beauty is one of the many who live close by the RCAF station at Holberg, Vancouver Island. They aren't as big as the Kodiak, of course, nor as evil-tempered. But they'll attack to protect their cubs and they have no time for dogs.

IN VICTORIA A CENTURY AGO

YOUNG MR. DICKENS CHARMED THE LADIES

In the late 1860s, Victoria, conscious of the Queen's Navy at Esquimalt, and of the titled young officers so often aboard, was more excited than ever when it was whispered abroad that a son of Charles Dickens was stationed with the fleet.

By JAMES K. NESBITT

It was indeed true, but because young Dickens was a midshipman, he was not permitted to accept all the invitations that went his way. He was in his early 20's and though not too dashing, seems to have had quite a way with the ladies.

There was not too much about Sydney Dickens in the newspapers of the time, except when he appeared in theatrical performances, for which the Navy was famous. Often these performances were held aboard ship and the suite of this place was invited.

Sometimes the sailors staged a performance in a downtown theatre, the proceeds going to some Victoria charity.

I find mention of Dickens in The Colonist the last day of December of 1868:

"The splendid success which attended the theatrical performance and ball given . . . under the auspices of the Admiral and Mrs. Hastings and officers of HM squadron stationed at Esquimalt must have proved as gratifying to the gentlemen who so ably and hospitably entertained so large a body of our fellow citizens as it was agreeable and amusing to their guests.

"The gathering at the theatre was large and composed principally of ladies; and what imparted to the affair an additional interest was the fact that every class in the community was represented.

"The Steeple Chase, or In the Pigskin, is one of the most amusing and laughable plays on any stage and passed off with scarcely a fault or a blunder.

"The principal character — Mr. Tittums — was taken by Mr. Dickens, a son of the world-renowned 'Boz,' an author who has done more to amuse and instruct the human family than any other living writer.

"We cannot say more in praise of the acting of the great novelist's worthy son than that he is a veritable 'chip off the old block.'

"Mr. Dickens sustained the part in a manner which gave evidence of great natural ability, combined with careful study and his audience was convulsed with laughter from first to last.

"During the evening the fine band of HMS Zealous performed several choice selections with taste and accuracy.

"From the theatre some 250 of the guests repaired to the Alhambra, where dancing was maintained for several hours.

"Admiral and Mrs. Hastings, Capt. Dawkin, Lieut. Brooke and many other gentlemen connected with the squadron contributed by their presence and personal exertions to the comfort and enjoyment of the guests, who retired at an early hour of the morning, evidently greatly pleased with the hospitable manner in which they had been received and entertained."

At another concert young Dickens was singled out for special attention: "The acting was capital — Messrs. Brodie, as Snizzle, and Dickens as Spriggin, and Lieut. Wright, sustained the leading part and gave the greatest satisfaction, although all in the cast did remarkably well."

And now for the mystery: "As the curtain was about to fall amid the warm plaudits of the audience a handsome bouquet was presented to Mr. Dickens by an ardent admirer in one of the boxes."

I wonder who the ardent admirer was? We'll never know. I would say it was one of the most beautiful of Victoria's belles. Perhaps it was Martha, the youngest daughter of retired Governor Douglas. Alas, we never now will know.

Young Dickens was attached to HMS Zealous, the flagship, and I suppose, discreetly in the background, as becoming a "midny," he was present at this affair: "Entertainment aboard the Zealous—A large number of ladies and gentlemen were guests of the officers of HMS fleet on board the flagship . . . and received a cordial welcome at the hands of their hosts.

"The noble ship was dressed in holiday attire and presented a picturesque appearance.

"Among the guests were noticed Mrs. Seymour (the governor being unavoidably absent), Admiral and Mrs. Hastings, the Chief Justice, Mrs. and Miss Needham, Hon. W. A. G. Young, Capt. and Mrs. Delacomb, and most of our leading officials and citizens with their families.

"The company sat down to a sumptuous luncheon, after which the guests repaired to the quarterdeck where the enlivening strains of the Zealous band, under Herr Gunther, summoned the devotees of Terpsichore and dancing was maintained until an early hour in the evening."

Curiously, in old diaries and letters, there is no mention of Sydney Dickens being here.

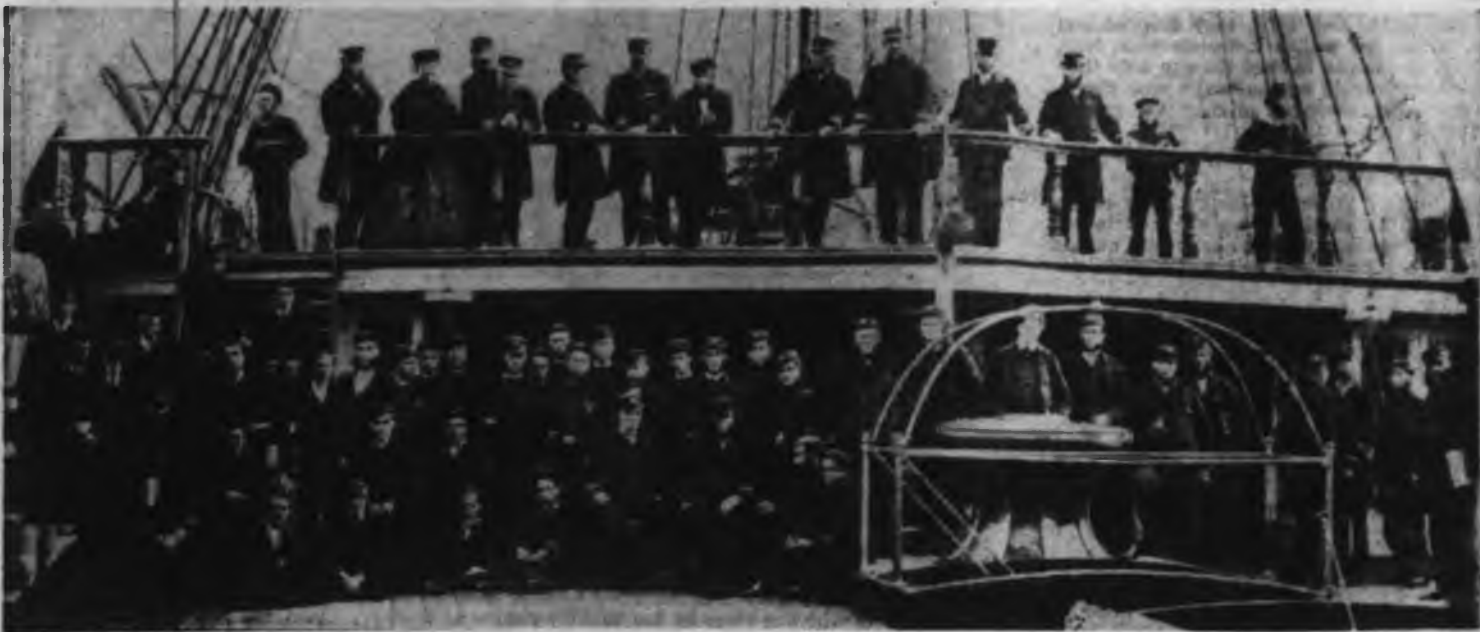

D. W. Higgins, long-time Mr. Speaker and editor of The Colonist, however, in his book, "The Mystic Spring," recalls Dickens:

"I met Sydney Dickens on many occasions. Admiral Hastings was then in command of this station. His flagship was the Zealous, one of the early type of armed cruisers, long since obsolete. Admiral Hastings was one of the most genial and kindly gentlemen I have ever been my good fortune to meet. Mrs. Hastings, who was much younger than her husband, was distinguished for her beauty and amiability.

"They occupied Maplebank, a spacious residence facing Esquimalt harbor and within a stone's throw of the flagship as she lay at anchor.

"In appearance, Sydney Dickens was rather insignificant. He was short and spare, but

In the house on St. Andrew's Street where I write these lines the paintings of Emily Carr once hung upon the walls. Other paintings hang there now, the work of my wife, Margaret Peterson.

Two comments have become routine when people enter the house and see these paintings for the first time. The first is, "They are 'Indian,' aren't they?" and the second, which almost invariably follows, "Of course, I don't understand art."

This latter remark is an admission of what might be called "visual illiteracy." Nevertheless, far from being an apology, it often sounds like a boast. The unlettered cave-man "understood" art, at least in the sense of what it could do to him and for him and his representations of it have come down to us through the ages. The same may be said of our coastal Indians whose totem poles and carvings adorn the world's leading museums.

One does not have to understand the atmospheric refractions and cloud formations which make a sunset what it is—and, indeed, I have noticed walking home along the Causeway in the late afternoon that few people lift their heads to the western sky. The daily wonder escapes them for the simple reason that they refuse to see it.

In the way of art I remain partial to a scene in the high country in which a grizzly is attacking a pack-trail. The unfortunate man in the middle is trying to free his rifle from its scabbard, his horse is trying to bolt, his pack-animals are scattered across the alplands and the grizzly stands upreared on his haunches—which, by the way, is not the attitude of a grizzly about to attack. He is merely trying to estimate the nature of this strange intrusion into his domain.

This attracts me, I suppose, because it is familiar: the terrain, the horses and the grizzly whom I have met more than once along the trail. Drama and struggle are in it, the stuff of literature in graphic form. Like some of the cave-man's drawings, it represents man's effort to survive.

My wife's paintings, which draw forth the two comments I have mentioned earlier, are of another sort. For the most part they represent nothing in the world visible around me. They have commanded attention in Victoria, Ottawa, San Francisco and New York because they are in themselves an act of being. Had we not lived for several years on Green Point at the head of Cowichan Bay many of them would probably not have been painted—but that does not give to them the title of being "Indian."

The Artist Has a Language All Her Own

HOWARD

THEN and

During our stay there we frequently attended the spring dances of the Cowichan Indians. Of one of these in the nearby village of Klem-kiem, I have written elsewhere:

"Inside the long-house masked figures draped in skins, furs and feathers, fanged like bear, beaked like birds, deer hooves clicking at their ankles—the young men who that night were to dance their way into manhood—circled slowly about the two fires of high-built fir logs. Sparks rose into the dusk, where beams supported the peaked roof of cedar shakes and through the vent holes streamed into the cloud-topped darkness . . . The beat of drums . . . was a tremor of the ground itself, a murmurous thunder from underfoot."

"Oo-oo-ah. Ah-ah-oh. Oo-oo-ah. Ah-ah-oh" was the chant of the old people as they hit with their sticks the long plank at knee-level in front of them. The chant was redundant, persistent, yearning. Through it they were reaching deep, deep into the past, into their far away and long ago. They were calling to other old men, to other old women, to their ancestral ghosts, who, before coming to the Island, had wandered the timbered valleys of the mainland, who had threaded their way through the icy mountains of the north and who, before that, around yak-dung campfires on the gusty plains of Asia, had, with similar chants, invoked the phantoms of a past even more remote and in a land still farther away.

"The old people also called to . . . Raven, whose voice inhabits the forest's dark places, to Whale, who knows the depths of the ocean and to Thunderbird himself. Each young man had his own song and danced his own dance. He rose to dance and sing, often foaming at the mouth when he felt that "power" had come into him from his clamorous surroundings."

No artist escapes his environment and it seems to me that these dances and the brooding forest through which we daily passed gave my wife an increased awareness of the imminent forces which shape man's destiny. The Cowichans, like other tribes up and down the coast, erected totem poles as symbols of these forces. Because her abstract paintings also appear in many ways to be symbolic, they are not therefore "Indian." The symbols are her own.

Words are symbolic of ideas. Languages have that in common. They are distinct from one another because of the different symbols they use.

The Cowichans, young and old, when they came to our house on Green Point, and saw the paintings on the walls, evidently did not feel obliged to make a comment. As a rule they looked at them in silence. This may have been a matter of courtesy or inhibition. I do not know.

I leave the final word with George Clutesi, a native of the Island's West Coast and himself an artist of stature. When a year or so ago he came to our house on St. Andrew's Street, perhaps having heard that the paintings here were "Indian," he regarded them and exclaimed to my wife, "Why, these aren't Indian! They're yours."

Young Mr. Dickens Charmed the Ladies

what he lacked in height and bulk he made up in dignity.

"He was no great horseman, but he was fond of riding out with the ladies. On horseback, when clad in smalls, and booted and spurred, he resembled a groom more than a gentleman.

"On one occasion he conveyed three of the fair sex to the neighborhood of the Millstream.

"There were few settlers and no roads and the trails were narrow and indistinct. The party took no food at all with them and by a strange mishap lost the trail. They floundered in the woods until darkness set in, when they abandoned their horses and tried to regain the trail.

"Their absence alarmed their friends and a search party was organized, lanterns procured and the searchers beat the bush until the grey of morning, when they came upon Dickens and two of his fair companions sitting beneath the shadow of a fallen tree and chilled to the bone.

"The other lady, in her fright, had wandered away and was not found until full daylight. She was in an awful plight, with clothes partly torn off from contact with brambles and her shoes worn out.

"With care and attention she soon recovered and was none the worse for the adventure. All admitted that Dickens showed great gallantry, but in spite of his bravery he was not again selected to pilot ladies through the forest."

I would very much like to know the names of these young ladies. I can find no mention of this outing in the newspapers of the time. Was one of them, do you suppose, the ardent admirer who tossed a bouquet of flowers to Dickens from a box in the theatre? We'll never know.

Higgins wrote: "Dickens left this station in 1871. He died at Aden, while on his way home from India. Invalided, with the flowers of youth and opportunity blossoming in the May of his existence."

The death notice in The Colonist in June of 1872 was not so flowery:

"Died—on the 2nd inst., on board the P and O steamer Malta, on his way home from Bombay, Lieut. S. H. Dickens, R.N., of HMS Topaze, fifth son of the late Charles Dickens. Many of our readers were well acquainted with this talented young gentleman who was on this station for sometime, attached to the flagship Zealous."

THE IMPROBABLE STORY OF PEACEFUL JANE

Twelve years ago, on the bright but somewhat hazy afternoon of Friday, Sept. 14, 10 horses could have been seen jogging in slow procession to the starting point for the first race at Vancouver's Hastings Track. From the good-natured crowd of around 9,000 on hand came the usual hum of mass opinion and contradiction, punctuated occasionally by the cries of white-jacketed hot dog vendors.

On the big totalisator board the odds had been changing, slowly or quickly, in step with the betting. Generally there was that air of trackside expectancy, normal to any afternoon at the races. It was an air, however, that was to suddenly change in the minutes that followed; something was about to happen to bring that crowd to its feet in a booing, jeering mood of anger and derision. In the plainest possible way they would give their opinion that a race had been fixed.

It wasn't, and I think I can prove it: prove it mainly by the five people most directly involved.

By strange coincidence the name of the filly responsible for the crowd's ire was Peaceful Jane and somewhat strange, too, is the fact that her owner, Bob Shanks, isn't Bob at all, but Richard.

To the end of the book, I suppose, he'll be Bob Shanks, for I've known him for nearly 45 years, from the days when he was a teen-ager around his dad's motorcycle shop on Johnson Street. Any Victorian who rode motorcycles in the past 50 years must have known the late "Pop" Shanks. Later, Bob and his brother Reg went into the motorcycle business (with separate agencies) until in time Bob's love of horses took him into saddlery. He's still at it, out on Douglas Street just north of the Roundabout.

It's a good many years now since I first heard the story of Peaceful Jane, and just to catch up on a few spare facts I hid myself out to Bob's six-acre Cedar Hill property the other evening, a place which incidentally gives elbow room for eight riding horses of his own.

Trophy Room

We settled down in his rumpus room, which in itself is distinctly horsey, with English hunting prints around the walls, and 21 trophies dotted here and there. On the nearby shelves the books are devoted to horsemanship, and even the bookends are horses' heads. The prize ribbons in a bureau drawer come literally in bundles.

Bob has been for years a familiar figure at gymkhanas up and down the coast, his chief interest being the show ring where he has put scores of flashy jumpers through their paces, building himself points for the finer aspects of dressage. Which, along with the demands of his business, has given him little time for race horses.

The exception, however was Peaceful Jane, foaled by his mare Candid, out of Little Argo,

Page 6—The Daily Colonist, Sunday, May 12, 1963

BOB SHANKS . . . disgruntled horseman son of Happy Argo, who hailed from Ireland. At first Happy Argo was far from happy, in fact he was downright vicious and in addition somewhat choosy about running.

He was sold to what was thought a luckless American, who reformed the conceited stallion into a pretty good race horse. So much for blood line.

It was in 1945 that Peaceful Jane first tried out her wobbly legs on the Cedar Hill property and two years later was learning how to stretch them properly on the old Willows track.

Trouble on the Track

It was there, as Bob Shanks related it, that an incident changed her form. One afternoon a photographer, anxious for an action shot, slipped under the rail to post himself in the middle of the track to get his picture of the oncoming horses. Somehow his appearance, or the flash he was using, caused a front running horse to shy and before you could say Queen's Plate, three horses and three riders were in a fearsome pileup that sprawled them all over the track.

With no visible injuries to horses or men, still it was evident in the months that followed that Peaceful Jane had been scarred by a curious traumatic disturbance. From then on, it was noticed, she wouldn't drive up through other horses, just somehow wouldn't get to the front. When she did perform well it was only when she got out in front from the start. Give her one lucky spring out of the starting gate, and she was mighty hard to catch. She proved this at Exhibition Park in '48 when she took the $1,200 "Oaks," B.C.'s premier track event.

Generally, however, her record was poor and in 1951, while her owner Bob Shanks stuck to his knitting selling saddlery, Peaceful Jane was one of a string being handled in Vancouver by the late "Doc" Ken Darbyshire.

Rarely a Winner

That summer, through to mid-September the six-year-old Jane had a dolorous record; in fact, let's face it, she was about the most non-winning horse the track had seen in some time. Not only had she hardly won a race in two years, but on Sept. 14 had never placed better than ninth in the last five starts.

So bad was her showing that Darbyshire was on the point of shipping her back to her owner in Victoria when, lo and behold, he discovered she had three friends; one was her jockey, Billy Filipchuk—"Give her a good start and she'll go"—and the other two were Darbyshire's grooms, Al Kinnersley and Gibby Fee. This trio pleaded for one more chance for Jane.

"Alright," said Darbyshire reluctantly. "But this is positively the last time she'll be entered."

Kinnersley and Fee were prepared to go even further; they'd back their optimism with cash. Trouble was, if they were long on the former, they were short on the latter. They had only a dollar apiece for the investment, but they hoped to enslave Darbyshire into tossing in a buck, to make it a $3 combination. Win, show or place, they'd get something out of it anyway.

"Nothing doing," said Darbyshire. He had gone as far as he was going to go, and wouldn't go a dollar further.

Money Was Scarce

In the stands, too, the horse players had shown that they also had gone as far as they would go—with Peaceful Jane. Proof was there that afternoon. Of the thousands of dollars that flowed through the betting windows, exactly $27 was wagered in straight bets on the parklock pariah. Money probably put up by people who had either never seen a horse race in their lives, or were hopelessly in love with someone called Jane! It was on this account that the tote board at the track showed that Peaceful Jane was carrying not only jockey Filipchuk in the first race, but also the unbelievable odds of 94.22 to 1! Favored to win the race, by the slim odds of 2 to 1, was Emerald Boy with the very successful Kenny Coppennoll in the saddle.

For Bob Shanks in Victoria, Sept. 14 was just another day for selling saddlery, and as he climbed into his car that morning a friendly neighbor—who incidentally handled a few off-the-track wagers—yelled out to him: "How about 5 to 1 on Peaceful Jane today?" The cynical Mr. Shanks answered the quip with an equally sarcastic, "Make it 5 to 1 she comes in last" and with that drove off.

He was less than interested for all that summer Peaceful Jane had been steadily munching her way through his bank account.

He Had a Tip

Later that morning when he took a coffee break at the now defunct Monterey, a waitress asked him if he had a tip for the afternoon's race in Vancouver.

"Sure," said Robert (or rather Richard), "Peaceful Jane in the first."

As he buried his nose in his cup, he almost sensed her look of mingled contempt and disbelief.

Nevertheless and despite all this, guided by extreme perversity or a fit of sudden madness, four people at Hastings Track that afternoon coupled Peaceful Jane with Van-Vic in the daily double, Jane to win in the first race, Van-Vic in the second. The more dangerous and far-fetched such a combination, the less people like it. The less they like it the fewer ticket holders; fewer ticket holders the more money per each. It's that simple.

One of these double players was Joe Diamond, a Vancouver coffee and spice merchant, who followed the simple formula of laying out two bucks on every horse in the first race (to win), turning in the tickets on selected horses in the second race. Teaming up the horses in this $20 outlay, by mere chance he linked Peaceful Jane with Van-Vic.

Cyril Had a Hunch

Up in the clubhouse bar, Stan Stoddart, the bartender, got talked into the same ridiculous bet by young Cyril McGuire, his seasonal helper at the cash register. Cyril was a law student working his way through UBC, and due to graduate in three months. Seems he knew a girl called Jane, hence the hunch. Fourth person to hold tickets in the double was a Vancouver housewife, whose name escapes me at this distance.

Up to post time, as I said before, there was nothing to mar the mood of the crowd. For a brief 30 seconds the 10 horses did their usual backing and filling at the gate, then at exactly 3:49 Clay Puett's brain child, the starting gate, whammed open.

Then it happened.

Peaceful Jane, in seventh position from the rail, took one of her rare jack rabbit leaps that landed her momentarily ahead of the field. It was only a few feet, but enough. Gone apparently with that sudden surge was the memory of being hemmed in by competing horses. She was alone, and she'd stay alone! In the rapid drumming of hoof beats that marked the next 74 seconds, while 10 horses covered the three-quarters of a mile, Peaceful Jane showed her heels to them all. Once or twice Emerald Boy was up close but he couldn't hold it, and finished third.

Billy Filipchuk was right; give her a good start and she'd go. The crowd who rose in the stands to express their scorn at the result, knew nothing of this.

When Filipchuk walked his mount to the winner's circle, his raised whip got the confirming nod from the judges, and as Kinnersley and Gibby Fee helped him dismount, the rising sound of the race-goers' jeers smote their ears. Gibby, they say, was almost knocking his eyes as his lips carried the hoarse message to his fellow groom, "Just listen to those They're booing us! And we didn't have a nickel on it!"

It was only too true; Darbyshire didn't bet, the grooms didn't bet and although jockeys aren't supposed to bet, Filipchuk's agent didn't hazard any money. The payoff, to those who are interested, was $190.40 to win, $47.50 for place and $10.98 for show.

At the end of the second race, with Van-Vic the winner, the pool for the daily double amounted to $6,808. With only four ticket holders, each got $1,702 for his $2 worth of action!

There were sidelights to the story that made it even more interesting: for instance, there would have been a fifth participant in the daily double had a Vancouver housewife not got so flustered at Peaceful Jane's win she completely forgot to turn in her winning ticket! Officials however were adamant and she got nothing. Still more fantastic was the case of a man who coupled Peaceful Jane to win in the first, and Captain Doo in the second. The Captain came second, but if he'd won then that happy individual would have taken the entire pool, close to $7,000 for his $2 bet!

When the cries of wrath and despair had died down, the tears all mopped, Cyril McGuire said his winnings would come in handy to furnish his new law office. What the others did with their loot is not a matter of history.

Of course you'll imagine that Mr. Shanks, the owner of the horse, came out alright. Sad truth was he didn't.

"The horse had piled up quite a bill of expense for me that summer," he told me, "and what with shipping charges, fees for exercise boys, shoeing and feed, I owed Darbyshire $740. My share of the win was $700, which meant I had to dig up another $40."

"Your friend the waitress in the Monterey—what did she think of it?" I asked.

Bob gave one of his slow grins. "She was in a very bad mood the next day—but heck, I did give her a tip, didn't I?"

It was soon after the famous race that Peaceful Jane was withdrawn from racing, and ultimately she ended her days around Cedar Hill where she was foaled and grew up.

FREEDOM FROM HUNGER CAMPAIGN

Stamps Carry Message

By FAITH M. ANGUS

The universal response to the Freedom From Hunger Campaign seems to justify the use of postage stamps as messengers or advertisers of projects that concern the general public of all countries.

Many people who seldom glanced at the stamps on their mail, have been attracted by some of the original designs already in circulation and are not only taking an intelligent interest in the work of the United Nations FAO-sponsored campaign, but have also discovered the fascination of philately.

International Red Cross issues are expected from 75 countries in commemoration of the centenary, and special albums are being advertised for both of these major issues of the year.

It is gratifying to note the names of two famous women in the list of United States commemoratives to be released in 1963. On July 24 an 8c airmail will be released at Atchison, Kansas, to honor Amelia Earhart, and an Eleanor Roosevelt commemorative is promised for Oct. 11.

The name of Montgomery Blair on the 15c May 3 issue from Silver Spring, Md., is not so well known outside of postal and philatelic circles. The Postal Conference set up 100 years ago by Mr. Blair, who was then postmaster general under President Lincoln, was the forerunner of the Universal Postal Union, a co-operative agreement under which the nations of the world carry each other's mail.

A RECENT EDITION of the Washington Post reported that the House of Representatives had received the Olsen bill to prohibit the post office from deliberately issuing defective stamps to undercut the value of a previous bad issue.

Some years ago when I was attending a school board convention there was a discussion on nursery schools. One very opinioned gentleman stood out against them quite vigorously . . . "Nursery schools," he said, "were simply 20th century gimmicks for lazy mothers to get rid of their children for a few hours a day."

There was quick protest from several women members. "What's the matter with that? Why shouldn't mothers, as well as other people, have a break from their job?"

Actually if any worker in our society needs an occasional break from routine, mothers do. In the course of a year she washes about 35,000 dishes, cleans seven acres of floors, makes beds over 1,000 times and washes rings out of basins and bathtubs at least 365 times. During the year she prepares 1,095 meals, to say nothing of the in-between snacks. She sees to it that there are always nibblings in the refrigerator, she remembers all birthdays with a cake and provides a warm welcome when any member of the family invites company for a meal.

Who but a mother would be equal to it?

Besides housework and cooking, mothers sew on hundreds of buttons in the course of a year; they mend socks by the dozen, do day and night duty during sieges of measles, mumps and chickenpox. They run a never-ending pick-up and delivery service, collecting and transporting every conceivable sort of being and thing. They balance budgets, conduct PTA meetings, make cakes for churches and still manage to look 10 years younger than their age. If ever anyone is entitled to a break it is this amazing person . . . MOTHER.

I don't suppose that Mother's work-day will ever be unionized but family appreciation does make her multiple tasks easier. Today, being Mother's Day, let's start by giving her breakfast in bed . . . Nothing else makes a mother feel so pampered. A tray with her breakfast attractively served, the morning paper to read at leisure, a well-chosen gift . . . these are bound to add up to a real pleasure for her.

Big juicy grapefruit are in good supply this month, so let's start with that. You can make a grapefruit half even more attractive for the occasion by cutting them with a handle. Here is how to do this . . . with a very sharp knife prepare the halves as usual by cutting all the way around to free the membrane. Now cut a narrow strip, a quarter of an inch below the top of the rim. Don't cut all the way around . . . leave one inch at each side. When the two side pieces are cut, lift them up toward the centre to make a double handle. Tie together with a small piece of ribbon and stick a daisy or Mother's favorite flower in the bow.

For the rest of the menu why not an egg prepared the way she prefers, orange juice, coffee of course, and Orange French Toast.

ORANGE FRENCH TOAST . . .

One egg, one-quarter cup orange juice, three tablespoons sugar, one and a half teaspoons grated orange rind, four slices day-old bread, one-quarter cup butter or margarine, two oranges sectioned, and confectioners' sugar. Beat egg with orange juice in a shallow dish. Add sugar and orange rind, mix well. Dip the bread in the egg mixture. Brown bread on both sides in sizzling butter in a skillet. Place orange sections on each slice of toast. Sprinkle with confectioners' sugar. Makes four servings.

To section oranges, cut off peel in circular motion, cutting deeply enough to remove white membrane. Go over fruit again to remove any remaining membrane. With a sharp knife cut along each dividing membrane from outside to middle of core. Remove section by section, over bowl to save juice.

If there is a teenager in the family how about giving Mother a break by making the dessert for dinner tonight. Here is a delicious Baked Orange pudding that gains its lightness and real orange flavor from fresh, frozen or canned orange juice and the addition of fresh orange sections for garnish. The pudding is baked in custard cups and lavished with the sections when unmolded on your prettiest dessert plates.

DEAR HELOISE:

Those big bleach bottles which all of your readers seem to be using for many, many things can also be used for something else I have never seen in your column.

Did you know that they make wonderful bird houses? They do!

Here's all you do:

Rinse the bottle out carefully and discard the top. The reason for discarding the top is so that odor from the bacteria which might collect inside where the birds gather can have an escape hatch. The top is so narrow that when it rains heavily it cannot come in the bottle anyway.

The next thing to do is cut two or three small holes in the bottom of the bottle. This allows for any moisture which might collect in the bottle to drop through. Take a sharp knife and cut at least two holes on each side of the bottle about the size of a silver dollar. The reason for the two holes in this bottle is so the birds can have ventilation.

All that is left to do is to hang this on the branch of a pretty tree in your garden. The handle of the bottle will fit over the branch stub.

Those who do not want to cut a stem or branch of the tree to hang the bottle on, can easily put a cord through the handle and tie it to any branch of the tree.

Our gardens are full of multi-colored bottles, some blue, some green and some white.

Heloise, it's absolutely darling. For the first time we have a colony of birds gathered among our trees

We don't believe that a mother will ever be replaced by automation until there's a machine that can mend a doll's head, a broken heart, the broken wing of a bird or a well-loved toy; that can make little pants from big pants, pillow slips from torn sheets and dolls' clothes from bits and pieces; that can arbitrate a backyard fight, stretch a budget and take out a silver without hurting; that can feed her baby her partridge, wipe her nose, button her into her sleepers and "hear" the children's prayers.

Plug-in appliances are wonderful but a mother is more wonderful. Hand me down a halo, Lord, I want to put it on Mother's head this very day.

The Shermans Live in Picturesque Seclusion by VIVIENNE CHADWICK

Amid the turmoil and uncertainty of a confused and overcrowded world, it's rather comforting to find people who manage, without actually reverting to primitive cave-dwelling, to achieve seclusion, beauty, and room to breathe.

This is what Fred and Katherine Sherman have done. They live on a couple of acres—foresightedly bought a long time ago, of course—alongside Canoe Cove, where, cuddled into a grove of arbutus, cedar and fruit trees above the water, they look out across the islets in the passage between themselves and Coal Island. It's very sheltered, very attractive, and not too easy to find . . . which is fine with the Shermans. Their friends know where they are!

Fred's background is a pioneer one. He was one of the first white children to be born at Cashmere, in the Wenatchee Valley, and his parents had come from Colorado by covered wagon and a six-mule team. His father had been a friend of Buffalo Bill's, and had once been deputised to ride out with General Custer on a punitive expedition which involved, says Fred, "settling Sitting Bull's hash!"

His mother was a devout member of the Church of England, but the community had no Anglican place of worship then, so, some time after the turn of the century, Bishop Hill of Olympia called on Mrs. Sherman to start the ball rolling both for a building and a congregation to fill it. Which she did. A wooden edifice was erected first, but Mrs. Sherman had always envisaged a stone church, so in due course, after having donated the property on which it was to stand, (now part of the town's main street), Mr. Sherman headed a crew to fetch the necessary boulders up from the river, and he himself did the stonemason work for the present church. Mrs. Sherman was asked to name it and she called it St. James.

Her husband was a man of property. At one time, in the 1870s, he owned something like half of the city of Spokane, but when the place began to grow, it grew in the wrong direction for Mr. Sherman, who, visualizing himself left high and dry, sold out . . . for a packhorse and a saddle!

Some years after the construction of the church, Mr. Sherman brought his wife and family to Vancouver Island. He bought much land north of Duncan, eventually subdivided it, and gave his name to today's Sherman Road.

He Loved the Sea

Young Fred's first job on the Island was with the well-known Cameron Lumber Co., at Genoa Bay, but this was a boy who loved the sea, and to this he presently turned for a way of life. He hasn't a master's ticket, he says, but he has been both mate and engineer on numerous tugs, and has skippered many a private yacht through our famous waterways. From Seattle to Skagway he calculates that he has, over the years, covered some 150,000 sea miles. His last job was as mate of the little ferry Cy Peck.

Katherine is English. She was trained in social work, and came with her parents to Duncan shortly before the outbreak of the Second World War. But for this, they might have returned to the Old Country, but they were caught. Here they stayed, and here she and Fred met. They recalled, with smiles, a courtship which involved canoeing on the Cowichan River; and an occasion on which he inadvertently (so he says) dumped her in the water. She climbed out onto a log, and log and canoe swirled down the current together until they reached a spot where rescue could be effected.

Home in a Boat

When they were married, in spite of the above, they thought they would like a boat of their own for the honeymoon. So they bought a little craft called Chack-chack, which means "bald-headed eagle," intending to use her for commercial fishing. For one reason and another this didn't work out, so in the end they tied up at Fulford, bought a piece of property up the hill from the harbor, and lived aboard while they built a house.

Presently, because Katherine's parents, now in Victoria, were growing old and wanted her close, they moved to the capital city, and it was about this time that they acquired the acreage near Canoe Cove. It was quite wild. However, Fred's sister had a home adjoining, so over the years one or the other, or both, would come out and visit and work. Gradually the underbrush was cleared, the land prepared for building, and great mossy rocks and ornamental boulders levered into strategic positions which would add interest to a future garden. A little cottage was put up in a corner as a starter. It's a guest house now.

Today they have an unusually harmonious two-storey residence, thoughtfully designed and built almost entirely by themselves. They learned as they went, and their ingenious and often highly original use of every inch of interior space is something to intrigue the dyed-in-the-wool home-lover.

Eye to Decor

These two have a gift for utilizing whatever material is at hand. Fishing floats strung on upright bars support the stair railings of an outside balcony, rather like the spool turnings of Jacobean furniture. One or two large, statuesque pieces of driftwood in their natural condition stand in key spots in the garden, and although one of these does perhaps, we agreed, look just a little intestinal, it isn't bogus. It's possessed of much more authenticity than, say, a tortured aluminum squiggle entitled "Mother and Child." Inside, an amusingly realistic driftwood shark is strung unobtrusively between open shelves, to guard the head of the stairs. The garden paths are crushed white shell.

The establishment has its own water supply. There is a good well, and should pipes freeze outside during a cold spell, the Shermans would be undismayed. The raising of a small section of their basement floor, fitted as a cover, gives them access to a good spring!

Miranda Was Perturbed

Certain problems of house-building were presented by the third member of the household, Miranda the cat. There was the matter of a new wall behind a bathing bath, which was going to cut Miranda off from her favorite hidey-hole under the tub. As the wall went up and the open space shrank board by board, Miranda became seriously disturbed. She could see plainly enough what was about to happen, and indicated in no uncertain terms that she didn't like it. So Fred Sherman obligingly left her a neat door about six inches square. It's called Miranda's Bomb Shelter.

She also has a small door to the garden, but this also presented difficulties. Trouble was it not only let Miranda in, it let in at the same time her gentlemen friends. And a not sufficiently wild raccoon, who got into the jam. The Shermans solved this by closing an inner door on Miranda, but attaching to it a large wooden curtain ring on a string, which she uses as a knocker to communicate her desire to leave the premises. She also has a specially upholstered corner at the juncture of two walls, for claw-stretching purposes.

With all of this, however, one receives the impression that Fred Sherman considers his piece-de-resistance to be his motor-barge. This is a flat decked hull, 24x8, with a cabin at one end, and a mast stepped about two-thirds of the way forward. It is called the Caboodle, because it takes the whole Kit and! Alongside is moored the Carlsark, a somewhat similar craft, and the property of Dr. Clifford Carl of the Provincial Museum. And it could well be that these two odd but interesting vessels are the only two of their kind in these particular waters.

Unique Construction

Fred built the Caboodle on what is now his front lawn, with the help of Paul Grau, who, he says, is about the best ship's carpenter to be found anywhere. The hull is built like a ship, of 3x8-inch cedar, and the cabin is plywood. It's powered by an outboard motor sunk in an open well inside the cabin, which contains two bunks and one of the world's finest coal stoves—for heat and cooking both. He carries a second motor as a spare, and can set this in a bracket rigged astern.

When he wants to sail, he drops a removable rudder into position, and operates it with a wheel beside the base of the mast. There are five keelsons laid underneath for stability, the Caboodle makes about four knots, and a choppy sea bothers her not at all. She may not be beautiful, says her owner, but she is marvellous fun. She is served by a tender whose name is Hunkydory—because it is a dory.

From the shipbuilding yard above to the water below is something of a drop, but this did not remain a problem for long. In addition to his barge, his float, his catwalks and steps, Fred has constructed his own ways, run by a motor winch at the top. Driftwood, shell for the paths, and such, go up; boats, supplies and equipment go down. For a long time, said my host, he was stymied by the fact that his engine would run only one way. He could haul up, but not down . . . and lowering heavy loads with manual braking is likely to smoke the leather from gloves and the skin from bare hands. So he lay awake and worried about this. But early one morning—"I get all my good ideas in the morning," he says—he came up with the answer. Now I'm not too sure about how he did this but, anyway, things go down now as well as up. Which was one more troublesome question settled.

Much interior finishing in the home has

CAPT. HARRY KINGSLEY remembers

Some of the things that went on in the early days of the Royal Canadian Navy would be pretty hard for one of the present-day service to understand or credit. Strange things did happen in such a small unit, where everyone knew everyone else, and you felt that the whole thing could fold up at any moment.

Until the buildup commenced before the Second World War one could not be accused of exaggeration if one likened the RCN to a political football, quite capable of being kicked out of bounds at any moment.

It was only rarely that a new class of about 10 recruits would be allowed to join, and then only if the estimates allowed. These would be looked over with great interest by the older inhabitants, in the manner of boys joining a new school. When they made their first appearance on the parade ground usually the older hands managed to find some excuse that would take them past that area (the small parade ground in Naden barracks). Judging from some of the remarks I chanced to overhear from time to time, one might have thought that the addition of new blood was almost considered an intrusion.

I am speaking now of 40 or more years ago. To begin with all the older hands had been straight transfers from the Royal Navy, who had come over with either the Niobe or Rainbow in 1910. But slowly we began to build up our own esprit de corps, whilst adopting the RN's time-honored traditions. There are characters now as then, but certainly they were more noticeable in a smaller Navy.

Everyone who served then will remember old Able Seaman Dunkley with his three good conduct badges. He and another three-badger named Drayton were about the only men that could do a proper long splice when the occasion demanded. The stories about Dunkley were numerous, for he was an engaging character with a sense of humor. He was always losing or regaining one or more of his three badges, and you never could be sure how many he was entitled to without looking up his certificate.

I recall one time that he was before Commander (as he was then) Roland Agnew for his latest restitution, and on being dismissed was heard to remark: "Three stripes for the skipper, three badges for me. Wonder who will keep them longest."

Then there was Able Seaman Pope, sometimes leading seaman, but more often not. He was an ex RNWMP constable, and inclined to be a source of trouble to some of us younger officers, principally because of his unorthodox methods and his fondness for the bright lights, but he was withal as fine a seaman as ever handled a boat.

Many will recall young Able Seaman Dick who became an institution of his own, playing the bagpipes on the quarter-decks when entering or leaving harbor. (Bands only came shortly before the war). He was with Lieut. Colin Donald and myself when we hit that uncharted rock in Pipestem Inlet up Barclay Sound back in 1925. The ship proceeded to sink and when I took the crew down to the life saving station at Bamfield he played his pipes all the way. Probably he was playing a lament. I wouldn't know.

I wonder how many know that we actually did not have a naval service for a whole day in 1921. That was when Admiral Kingsmill resigned because of the proposed cuts, and the recently-acquired cruiser Aurora was laid up. Somewhere along the line the Army seriously suggested taking over the naval service since it was so small and they said they had plenty of experience with their tenders which carried supplies across Halifax Harbor. We had the laugh on them later, when Parliament failed to pass the estimates on time, and the Army ran out of money. The paymaster at Work Point had to issue script on local grocers so that the soldiers' families would not starve, but the small naval service was able to transfer funds from another unspent section and we were paid on time. The amount was so small anyhow that it could not have been a major problem at that time.

Canada's first two destroyers were old Admiralty M Class, transferred to us and renamed Patriot and Patrician — three funnels, three four-inch guns, four torpedo tubes. For a short time in 1925 I was in Patrician on this West Coast. When there is only one destroyer and two old minesweepers to choose from, a job in the destroyer is a plum, and my luck was in at the time. A sub-lieutenant was required, and I was the junior officer around, although I was a lieutenant of two years' seniority. It lasted only until a more junior officer arrived on the coast—Sub-Lieut. H. N. Lay. It was a case of "Juniores Priorores."

HMCS PATRICIAN

If I recall correctly, we were only allowed to fire our three guns once a year, because of the cost of the ammunition, but the torpedo armament could be fired anytime there was a suitable target since a torpedo could usually be recovered even if the collision head had been damaged by a direct hit, as one hoped would be the case.

Each summer one of the RN cruisers of the America and West Indies squadron visited these waters, and that was about the only chance of getting a lick in with these weapons. It so happened, in 1925, that when Patrician fired her shot at the cruiser (HMS Curlew, I believe) that her aim must have been true, for the target ship reported a most satisfactory bump, and after that nothing more.

This took place in the waters of the Straits of Georgia, and a lengthy search failed to produce any trace of our torpedo. Both ships then entered Vancouver harbor and we prepared to enjoy the evening, but a report came through that something resembling a torpedo had been towed in to Gibson's Landing by a fishing boat.

Gibson's was not shown on the Admiralty charts, but it happened that I knew it well, our summer place having been located only a few miles from there, so naturally I was elected to the job of recovery, and shortly left the ship in a fast motor boat. I had with me a select crew of three, which included the torpedo gunner's mate. That would probably have been Patrick Budge, now a retired rear admiral. It was quite a long journey, and there was no way of telling what speed we would be able to make on the return, always providing that the torpedo was in a state that would allow of being salvaged.

EARLY NAVY DAYS

On arriving at the little summer resort, on the far side of Howe Sound, we found to our dismay that our torpedo was lying on the bottom in about 10 feet of water. Obviously it would not take kindly to being towed, but after getting the thing to the surface, we managed to lash it alongside, using the life-boats to prevent the lugs putting a hole in the side, and all of us sitting on the other side we pushed off in some trepidation. Fortunately it was calm, but it seemed a terribly long way to Vancouver, especially when every little water tourist closed us to see what we were doing, and we caught their wash. However we made it eventually, and late that night a rather second-hand torpedo was hoisted aboard.

That was one small episode in the old Patrician in which I was personally involved, but not long before that (in the summer of 1924) she had been in a search that covered the whole Esquimalt, Victoria and Cadboro Bay areas looking for the occupants of a whaler from the Naval Barracks.

The first lieutenant of Naden at this time was Lieut. Ronald C. Watson, a PT specialist, and on a certain Saturday afternoon he left on a sailing picnic in one of the Montague whalers, taking with him his wife and three ordinary seamen, but leaving behind his two small children. These boats are 27 feet overall, have a drop keel, a jib foresail and mizzen, and are provided with five oars.

The senior naval officer, Commander C. T. Beard, began to get anxious when they had failed to return and dusk was setting in, and he ordered Patrician to raise steam with all dispatch. Not waiting to collect the captain or most of the crew who were still ashore, Commander Beard took the gunnery officer from the barracks, Lieut. R. Oland, and set sail. They remained out all night, using search-lights and boats but found nothing. Returning to harbor the next morning to pick up the proper crew, they received a report that the whaler had turned up in Foul Bay with Mrs. Watson's body in it. Only her shoes were

Once Upon a Time They Called Harry Hughes The Fishing Admiral

Captain Harry Hughes, a fourth generation Canadian, of Empire Loyalist stock, was born in Digby, N.S., and came from a line of seafaring men. His father came from Nova Scotia to go sealing on the West Coast and was the owner of a schooner named the Ida Etta. In 1895 William Hughes was on the Willipa, with Capt. Foote of the C. P. Navigation Co. Capt. Foote was later lost in the Islander which struck an iceberg at Juneau in Gatineau Channel in 1900 and during the Klondike gold rush. He went down with his ship. William Hughes became master on the west coast run, on the Willipa and the Queen City.

Harry Hughes lost his mother when he was four years old and when he was seven came to Victoria with his father, William. He attended North Ward school when it first opened. Born in 1885, he is today a lean and active man, living alone at historic Bannockburn.

It was always Harry's desire to go to sea, although against his father's wishes. In 1901 he shipped in the old Tees, on her northern British Columbia run. The Tees, at that time, was considered most palatial, and was under the command of Capt. William Hughes. Harry signed on as a deckhand and the Tees sailed from the Outer Docks, loaded with 1200 cases of tin plate, each case weighing 125 pounds, for the canneries.

During the ensuing four years Harry sailed in the Tees, Princess Beatrice, and Princess Royal on the Skagway run, and in 1905 got a mate's ticket. The captain, his father, was harder on him than on anyone else aboard and tried in vain to drive his son from the sea.

In 1898 the CPR bought out the CP Navigation and formed the B.C. Coast Service under Capt. J. W. Troup. One trip Harry well remembers was in 1903 when he left on a routine run to northern B.C. The ship landed passengers and mail and went on to the Nass River. Landing back at Port Simpson they were met by all the Indians in big war canoes. The ship docked and a young doctor, W. T. Kergin, informed them they had landed a case of smallpox, were under quarantine, and must proceed forthwith to William Head.

The passengers were a noted crowd—

MARGARET WILLIAMS

William Lord, a big cannery man from Skeena, Capt. Gilmour, of West Coast fame, and A. M. Lyons who ran the Hardy Bay store, coming south with his fiancée to be married. Nearing Victoria at 2.30 a.m., the ship ended up high and dry on Trial Island. No one was allowed ashore and no one could come aboard. At 11 p.m. the tug Lorne, the American tug Pioneer, and Princess Beatrice, outward bound to Seattle, put a line aboard and hauled the old Tees off the rocks. She proceeded to William Head. The passengers were landed, steam bathed, their clothing fumigated, the ship fumigated and towed to Victoria. The whole crowd of 40 to 50 passengers, and the crew of 40, were in quarantine for 10 days. This mishap is really what brought the light and foghorn to Trial Island. After the Tees had got 17 new plates in her bottom at Bullen's shipyard, she was ready for work again.

Lost Propeller

About this time Harry Hughes signed as quartermaster for the West Coast run in the Queen City. At one time, he recalls, the last stop was at Burg Cove, a Norwegian settlement. The signal for astern was rung and the propeller dropped off!

They anchored and put lines out astern to the beach. What now? In those days there was no telegraph, no wireless, and absolutely no quick way of letting their plight be known.

C.M.S. ESTEVAN . . . in which Harry Hughes served more than 20 years.

It was decided to send the second mate, John Richardson, over the Indian trail from Quatsino to Hardy Bay, a 14-mile walk. To his despair he found not a soul at Hardy Bay. The hotel, built by Capt. Myers, was deserted.

said to be missing, and the boat, which remained upright and full of water, contained nothing more than a single back shoe of one of the seamen.

The search was carried on for several weeks but nothing further was ever found. It can only be conjectured that they had been swamped in the tides off Trial Island, and the men had tried to swim ashore. It remains a mystery, but nothing had shaken the Navy so much in these waters since the loss of HMS Condor in 1901. For 10 years or more thereafter no boats were allowed to proceed under sail beyond Fisgard Light.

However there were many bright moments in those days, too, and I recall with pleasure the visits we used to pay to little-known Philip's Arm (in the vicinity of Bute Inlet), where both hunting and fishing were marvellous. There were Dolly Varden and cut-throat trout in the river, so numerous that even I could get my quota without trying, and in the great mountains that surrounded the inlet were bears of all kinds, deer, and mountain goats. Some people said they saw sheep, too, and certainly we heard the wolves howling at night.

As is so often the case at the head of these inlets an Indian village was located not far from the mouth of a river, and on the first occasion of landing we were somewhat surprised when someone started firing at us. There was nothing to do but to return to the ship, put on uniforms, organize a landing party and try again.

The captain was Lieutenant W. J. R. Beech and he boldly approached the rough-looking gang near the huts. We were not interfered with, but you could tell that they did not like us being on their reservation, and only the sight of the armed party ensured their good behaviour. Fortunately the chief spoke English, and it turned out that the shooting was merely his method of making sure that visitors asked permission to land. This was soon granted, but the Indian made no attempt to fraternize, and simply retired to their huts.

In the few days that we remained in this place I sometimes took a gun ashore with me, but thank goodness I never saw a grizzly. I heard that Lieut. W. B. Holms bagged a mountain goat shortly after and had a frightful time getting the evidence back to the beach.

There was one white trapper who lived in a cabin not far away, and he visited us one day as we lay at anchor. He kept his matches dry in two cartridge cases that he had fitted together, and told tales of his first arrival. I wish I could remember them. Apparently the Indians had threatened him; and once three of them sat around in his hut all night. But he was made of stern stuff and simply refused to budge.

He told us that the chief's brother was serving a 40-year term for shooting an American traveller the year before.

One of my last memories of the old Patri- cian was stopping off Qualicum Beach to send in a boat to land a reserve engineer lieutenant, so that he could catch a bus for the first stage of his return journey to Calgary. His name was M. V. Chestnut and as an FRHS he has given us the benefit of his knowledge about gardens for many a year past. May he long continue to do so.

Among the various attractions with which we shall this year celebrate May 24 on May 20 is the Victoria Operatic Society production of "Song of Norway."

This goes on for three nights at the Royal Theatre with the thud of the mallet at 8:30 p.m.

Time was when the Victoria Operatic Society was the Victoria Gilbert and Sullivan Operatic Society. If memory serves aright, however, the society was presenting operas other than those of Sir William and Sir Arthur before it actually and officially changed its style and address. This being so, the new title was logical and, indeed, more accurate.

Anyway there's nothing in the world to stop them doing G and S works even though they have dropped those names from their letterheads and instruments of incorporation.

Thus, they embark joyfully on "Song of Norway" without the feeling that they have exceeded their artistic bounds or gone beyond their artistic pale.

"Song of Norway" concerns the life of the "Chopin of the North," Edvard Grieg. Naturally, it uses his music, adapted and provided with lyrics by Robert Wright and George Forrest. The book is by Milton Lazarus, who also revised Victor Herbert's "The Red Mill" and his version of "Song of Norway" is, in turn, based on a story by Homer Carran.

It was produced at the Imperial Theatre in New York on August 21 of 1944, whither it had arrived as a sparkling and worthy gift from San Francisco and Los Angeles.

It caught on. Helene Blum who incidentally is still at it and is a head player with Theatre Under the Stars in Vancouver this summer, played Nina Hagerup—later Nina Grieg. Lawrence Brooks appeared as Grieg and the show piled up 860 performances although it had stern competition. Another musical, "Bloomer Girl," which opened down the road at the Shubert less than two months later, ran 654 performances.

A mere nine days after Grieg showed up at the Imperial, the play, "Anna Lucasta," started a run of 957 performances at the Mansfield and a few weeks later there were echoes from the Music Box Theatre for Jean van Druten's "I Remember Mama" which played 714 times.

And the first night in November, 1944, was the first night for "Harvey," that utterly fantastic comedy by Mary Chase. Tickets were selling briskly on November 2 for dates months ahead and "Harvey" exceeded all his contemporaries with 1,775 performances, the sixth highest all-time record on Broadway.

This was the sort of competition facing "Song of Norway" when it opened in New York. It not only survived: it prospered.

Thus, our Victoria Operatic Society has a good, healthy production set for May 20. No doubt Grieg's music had much to do with it; such charming melodies as "Strange Music" and "I Love You."

(then Barbara Oldhall) was "Nina." Bill Housie was "Grieg." Rino Elverhoy was "Rikard Nordraak" and Darlene Frewing gave an excellent performance "as that acquisitive extrovert," Louisa Giovanni, Countess Peppi.

I said at the time that Darlene gave us "an excellent musical comedy Countess, a breed of the nobility apart from the usual run."

There is a strong, talented cast, however, for the Operatic Society's "Song of Norway" and the musical and stage direction are in the capable hands of Frank Slater and Colonel Victor Mills.

Edvard Grieg himself will be played by Harry Elsdon. Although this is Mr. Elsdon's first appearance with the Victoria Operatic Society, he has long and valuable experience with another such society, albeit far removed from Victoria.

This was the West Hantspool Operatic and Dramatic Society, West Hantspool being situated in the pleasant County of Durham in England. Here Mr. Elsdon sang the leads in both "Oklahoma" and "The Girl Friend," and carried major parts in "Bless the Bride" and "1886 and All That." In addition, he appeared in numerous revues, plays and pantomimes. Mr. Elsdon is a member of the Victoria Choral Society.

Opposite Mr. Elsdon, as "Nina," will be Sharon-Ann Evers. She, also, is new to Victoria audiences but played for two seasons with the Winnipeg "Rainbow Theatre" as well as at the Winnipeg

Grandstand Show. Singer, actress, pianist and painter, Sharon-Ann brings experience, varied talents and lots of charm to the forthcoming presentation of "Song of Norway."

A member of the Operatic Society for many years, tenor Bob Williams plays "Rikard Nordraak," Grieg's friend and associate whose early death profoundly affected the composer.

Mr. Williams has appeared for the Society in "Brigadoon," "The Yeoman of the Guard," "The Red Mill," "The Merry Widow," "HMS Pinafore," "The Mikado" and "Merrie England."

Louisa Hanley is the "Countess, Louisa Giovanni," with Clive Yoxall as the "Count."

Mr. Yoxall's most recent appearance was as "Dickie Owl" in "Birds of a Feather," the one act comedy entered by the Old Vic

"she played two very different characters knowingly and with all manner of vivacity . . . she was consistently not only on the ball but exactly on the appropriate ball as well."

For their presentation the Operatic Society has another talented, flexible and versatile artist in Janet Senior—she who accomplished such an outstanding performance in an otherwise rather shaky production of "Brigadoon" a few years ago.

"Sigrid" and "Miss Anders" are in reliable and capable hands.

Grieg's father and mother are to be played by Tony Wilkins and Margaret Duff with Ellis Todd as Nordraak's father. The veteran performer, Jim Mead-Robins, the inimitable "Judge" in "Trial by Jury," carries the role of "Henrik Ibsen" and Will Jackson, a stalwart of the theatre in Dunsmuir, will appear as "Pisani."

And there are dancers, too. As in 1936, so in 1963, they are provided by the Wynne Shaw Studio. Lydia Watt, an "Ice-Maiden" in 1936, graduates to the part of "Adelina" this year.

All this promises very well. Tickets, by the way, go on sale at Eaton's box office on May 13, allowing just one week in which to select an advantageous perch from which to view proceedings.

Everything suggests that it might be worthwhile to do just this!

Miss Hanley was formerly a member of the "Elizabethan Singers" whose program was heard, Dominion-wide, over the CBC network. She has been in Victoria for the past 12 years and has appeared in several operettas and plays.

While the two parts of "Sigrid" and, later on "Miss Anders" were not doubled in the New York production of "Song of Norway," they have been so treated in many other productions.

Miss Sylvia Mubey played both for Victoria High School. It was remarked of her performance that

The Financial Backers were Afraid . . .

They said it was impossible.

They had a special word at California's Oakland Airport for the rangy, hank-nosed Australian who was now climbing into his three-engined Fokker monoplane, and settling himself in his wicker chair at the controls.

"Crazy."

Charles Kingsford-Smith—"Smithy" to his fellow air pioneers, and later knighted—had been hearing a lot of that word. It was the prompt, uncompromising retort of everyone to whom he outlined his visionary plan.

He was going to demonstrate that the Pacific could be flown—and safely. In this aircraft, he was going to link America with his homeland in one momentous three-hop flight.

All previous ocean-spanning flights were going to look like afternoon pleasure-flips by comparison. This was cocking a snook at the last great challenge left to early aviation—and the toughest.

If anybody could pull off so formidable a feat it was this stout, experienced flyer "Smithy" was much more than a mere record bagger. Already, in his visionary dream, he was seeing the Pacific Ocean crossed and re-crossed by a network of safe, reliable air routes.

Few shared his confidence. He could hardly expect them to, so soon after a disastrous crop of similar attempts by other less experienced pilots.

His backers, scared by these failures, had left him high and dry. The government of New South Wales, cancelling their promised £3,500, had advised him to catch the first ship home.

"I don't want your blood on my hands," said a rich Australian who had also put up money. "Spend it on something else." But he got $16,000 from a sympathetic American.

The debts grew; and it seemed that there would be no flight. Nor would there have been had not this wealthy American appeared, with enough perception to believe in "Smithy's" vision to the extent of $16,000.

So now, the last day of May, 1928, the Fokker lumbered off the grass, and winged outwards above the morning haze that hung about the docks fringing San Francisco Bay. Soon it was heading out into the empty Pacific.

Grinning in his open cockpit, "Smithy" hauled a flag under his seat, and stuck its staff among the instrument knobs. In the flag's corner was a tiny Union Jack. The rest of its area depicted the stars of the Southern Cross—the name that was painted boldly along the aircraft's side.

Then "Smithy" shook hands with his Australian co-pilot, Charles Ulm. Penned in the small cabin amidships, navigator Harry Lyon and radio operator Jim Warner, Americans, shook hands too.

The breath-taking adventure had begun. They were off on their first terrifying ocean leap: 2,400 miles to Honolulu. After that it would be 3,138 miles to Suva in the Fiji Islands, then 1,500 miles to Brisbane.

They would see no land now for more than 24 hours.

Soon they were into cloud; and losing valuable fuel, as they veered time after time from their course to avoid the soaring, fluffy masses. "Smithy," feeling something prodding him at his back, turned to find a long stick poked through from the cabin by his radio operator, with a note fixed to its tip.

It was discouraging news. They had lost touch with the San Francisco radio beacon.

By now they were banking, veering and climbing more than ever to dodge the cloud. If they were also off course, and had to waste further fuel looking for Honolulu. . . . Would their 1,200 gallons of petrol be enough?

If they were on course, they ought to be seeing ships below; lots of them. There was not one in sight. Hastily, they made new calculations; but these hardly cleared them up. If they were correct, the Southern Cross could not make it.

The day wore on. Shortly before dusk they took a bearing on the sun and found they had drifted southwest. They had almost 1,600 miles still to go. They climbed several thousand feet, as a precaution against the long night ahead.

The outboard wing petrol-tank cut out; and this at least was good. It had lasted a little longer than they had expected. Then the sun sank spectacularly, and they were plunged into near-total gloom.

They really felt like pioneers then, winging along with only their engines' drone for company; and their shadow skimming the massed cloudbanks below.

They fell silent, pondering their dwindling petrol store. All sensed a strange loneliness that brought no reassurance. It was not a happy night.

By midnight they were climbing again, to avoid a particularly massive cloudbank. They had petrol left for 15 hours' level flying, and it would take 12 at least to reach Honolulu.

Two hours later they sighted a ship's lights. This cheered them a little against the raw night air, and at last came the first dawn light.

Many times, as the sky brightened about them, they thought they saw land. Then the volcanic peak of Mauna Kea reared at last among the clouds. Then a squadron of U.S. fighters roared out to welcome the Southern Cross which touched down faultlessly after 27 hours and 25 minutes in the air.

As they rested the world echoed to the news of their achievement. But the second leg was going to be worse—3,138 miles to Fiji, in hurricane areas.

This time they must neither wander nor be blown off course. Every gallon of petrol counted. The smallest slip would land them in the sea, disastrously short of Suva.

The Southern Cross, every spare corner packed with extra petrol tanks, roared off again, straight into a series of air pockets. For long minutes "Smithy" and his co-pilot wrestled desperately at the controls, as the aircraft's extra weight dragged them precariously near the water.

Three hours out, they could not pick up the radio beacon. Then their radio would not work at all. To add to their peril, a storm was building up ahead.

For hour after hour they flew blind through drenching squalls, with cloud all about them no matter how high they climbed.

The night seemed an endless nightmare. Once, when the lights on the instrument panel flickered out, they would have been lost if Ulm had not at once snapped on an electric torch.

Morning brought worse weather. Lightning struck through the stormclouds now, and all four men were thrown to the floor as the plane was tossed about the sky. The radio had been mended, but emitted only a crackling din.

Still questing, they dropped from 8,000 feet until they were only 400 feet above the sea; then had to climb again.

The petrol left was barely enough for another seven hours' flying.

Land was sighted an hour later, then lost again. And at last, after 35½ airborne hours, the Southern Cross burst into the brilliant sunshine of the Fiji Islands.

They skidded down towards the tiny 400-yard landing strip. Then, in sudden consternation, saw they were approaching too fast, "Smithy," almost spent from his long ordeal, touched down halfway along the strip—then realized it was too late to take off and come in again.

But he also saw that, in a corner to his right, the fence was set further back. Slew the plane, he took advantage of this extra ground. They pulled up shudderingly, just short of the fence.

Two days later, soaring off from a beach, the crew of the Southern Cross felt buoyantly confident. What was another 1,500 miles to them now?

But soon a fault developed in their main compass—the only one aboard on which they dare rely absolutely. Should they turn back?

There would have been no choice had the distance been longer. But all Australia was preparing to welcome them and the weather outlook seemed promising.

They flew on.

Night brought blinding rain and treacherous winds. Through the gathering storm, they had occasional glimpses of a murderous sea.

They sat drenched and shivering as the rain poured in. It became so dense they were seriously alarmed lest the magnetos should fail and the engines stall.

It was another cyclone. They climbed to try to clear the storm, then dived to keep the engines going. The danger now was not that they might wander a few miles off course, but that they could be blown hundreds of miles by the storm.

With daylight, the weather improved. But where was Australia? They had been flying for 17 hours; they should have been over the coast by now. Yet all they saw was the empty sea.

Two hours later, the heroes of the Southern Cross sighted the dim blur that was Australia.

In another hour after that—over eight days and 10,000 miles after taking off near San Francisco—they were down at Brisbane. Altogether they had been nearly 83 hours in the air. Their average speed was not much over 85 miles an hour. But their niche in history was assured.

THE FISHING ADMIRAL

Richardson discovered an old Indian canoe, split down the middle. He found a few nails and attempted to patch it up, and in this he set out for Fort Rupert. Keeping close to shore, he rounded the point and headed in. There was a sea running and his canoe split in two and he was forced to swim for it. He crawled around the beaches to Fort Rupert and reached a store run by Harry Cadwallader. Cadwallader had an old schooner, the Hesperus, and from aboard this they tried to hail passing steamers, without success.

Arriving finally at Alert Bay, Richardson got off a message to Victoria.

Meantime, it was surmised by all that the Queen City was lost. However, the CPR sent the lighthouse tender Quadra, under Captain Blackett. He was not familiar with small places along the coast so Capt. William Hughes was sent along as pilot and after three weeks the Queen City was located. Harry Hughes says he is now the last of the crew of the Queen City at that time. The ship was finally towed home by the tug Lorne.

After this Capt. Hughes shipped in the smallest of the CPR ships, the Otter, as second officer. On that first trip, he remembers, they loaded all gear for a whaling company at Kyuquot, a new station. They loaded a boiler and 27,000 bricks.

Mission of Mercy

In 1906, the time of the great San Francisco earthquake, Harry sailed with his father in the steamer Amur, with a full load of supplies and provisions, donated largely by the Dunsmuir interests, for the stricken city. Harry at this time was quartermaster. Capt. C. D. Neurotus was chief officer of the line and the late John Heritage was chief engineer.

Harry remembers the thousands of people sheltering in the Golden Gate Park.

An 18-inch wide crack ran right up Market Street but the ferry building at the foot was unharmed.

Harry next went on the logging camp run, joining the Queen City as second officer under Capt. Gunns. Mate was Jerry Shaw, later lost in the Princess Sophia. Harry was promoted to mate and spent three or four years aboard the Queen City, one winter on the Nasa River run.

He was next appointed chief officer of Princess Beatrice on the Prince Rupert and Queen Charlottes run. At one time, he recalls, they were chartered by the Pitts Bros. of Pittsburg. Their experts aboard were searching for coal up the Slatechuk at Skidegate. The following season he spent in Princess Royal as chief officer under Capt. Neurotus, on the Skagway run and in the Princess May under Capt. McLeod. When the Princess Sophia came out brand new in 1913, from Paisley, Harry was her chief officer for a season. In 1914 he was on the steamer Gray of the Pacific Whaling Co. He stayed 18 months, and it was, he says, the hardest job he ever had on this coast. They worked seven days a week, night and day.

After 18 months of this he joined the government ship Estevan in the lighthouse service, as second mate. He stayed with the Estevan for 30-odd years, with a break for three years, 1916-1919, while with the Royal Navy. He was first on a motor launch, then gunnery and watch officer on an armed yacht, the Iolanda, 350 feet long, built by an American millionaire. For a year he was on convey duty, based on Gibraltar.

With the Fishermen

Harry, now a lieutenant, was sent to Grimsby and placed in charge of a convoy of 20 fishing ships. "They are the toughest men in the world," he says, "and trying to keep them in limits was quite a job." Soon after this he was in charge of a convoy of fishing vessels going to Iceland. "God help you if you lose any ships," he was told, and he never did. Some broke down and had to be towed home.

He stayed for 18 months on that job, conveying the fleet to Iceland, putting them on the fishing grounds, and staying with them. Their methods of navigation were crude, he says. He was known then as the "Fishing Admiral." He recalls fishing off the south of Iceland for cod. They were 10 feet long, and ugly brutes.

Back in Canada after the war, he worked for the Canadian Fishing Co. in Vancouver, running a packer down the West Coast, buying spring salmon, and in 1920 was back on the Estevan as chief officer. Soon after this he married Gertrude Thomson of Bannockburn, and with the exception of a short stay in Vancouver, Harry and Gertrude lived out their years at the beloved old home in Saanich. And Harry is there today. He lost his wife five years ago.

In the Estevan he became captain in 1940.

He retired in 1950, after 50 years at sea. He came ashore and stayed ashore. Sometimes he goes down to take a look at the Estevan. It was hard work, but, as he says, hard work never hurt anyone. As captain, he knew the risks and dangers. There was much more work then and much less pay.

There is still that clear, blue look of the sea in Harry Hughes' eyes. His memories of the coast of this province are rich and the old ships move once more through the bleak or sunlit seas as he recalls his adventures.

been done by Mrs. Sherman, including bathroom panelling and tile work, of which her husband is distinctly proud. Some years ago, when they lived on Salt Spring Island, she belonged to a little group of artists, and did a number of soft and appealing water-colors which now hang here and there in the house. Then she studied for awhile with teachers who were more interested in abstracts, which, she says, interested her up to a point but definitely made her bored with all her previous paintings. So now she isn't painting at all, which is rather a shame. Just goes to show how harmful an evil influence can be!

However, she'll probably find the answer to this, too, in due course. Certainly she and her husband would appear to have been most resourceful in coping with all the other problems which, at once time or another, have confronted them during the establishment of a very pleasant home life.

Maybe There's a Lesson Here:

BEFORE YOU WRITE LEARN TO READ

Reviewed by THOMAS C. WAUGH

One wishes that publishers could find something like books to put between covers. But, alas, such is becoming exceedingly unfashionable.

One of the major reasons for this naive approach to literature is that anything which is popular with the public—no matter what entertainment medium it comes from—deserves to be preserved for posterity in type.

Nothing else could justify Ryerson's presentation of this pitiful volume.

Those of you who have spent 15 minutes daily (1.45 to 2 p.m.), ear funneled to the radio and gazing numbly at the change of seasons through the kitchen window, will recognize

by John Drainie; Ryerson Press; $3.95.

these short stories. By writing standards they are very short; they were written to last approximately 10 minutes.

Also by writing standards, they are rather pointless. One cannot read the variety of inflections, the tonal quality of words, the richness of word weight — on the printed page. These values, the only reason for the stories in the first place, are all lost.

The variety of subjects is amazing: cemetery practices, Jesuit missionaries, the world of science. The imagination of the writer as it casts about for a new milieu, for a new situation, for a new mood is always awe-inspiring.

But the actual art of writing is not designed to capture the spoken word in time — indeed, it cannot be done.

Let me take, as an example, the story in this collection by Ernest Buckler. He is the author of the excellent The Mountain and the Valley, and I know his work intimately.

Mr. Buckler is a writer of the first rank. His dexterity with mood is gripping. His "manipulability" (his own expression) with words is astounding. The man can juxtapose old words or create new ones in a never-ending continuum of delight. In fact, his writing technique is reminiscent of Gertrude Stein at her best.

In this book he is represented by a pallid, feeble essay of inconsequential interest and mediocre ability. None of his versatility and virtuosity is apparent. And this is, unfortunately, only to his detriment.

One must return to the obvious premise. These stories were written, not to be read by a reader but to be read by an actor. Treated thus, they are most effective. As they stand, page by page, they can only be regarded as pathetic.

For the Whole World:

TRANSFORMATION

By JOHN BARKHAM

What the future holds for mankind is hidden in the womb of time. But of one thing we may be certain: our great-great-grandchildren will live in a world vastly different to our own. We are, in fact, the primitives of the 20th century.

Fanciful? Not at all. We may confidently make this assertion on the basis of present knowledge. Merely projecting current trends a few generations ahead—without making allowance for radical new discoveries — brings into view a startlingly different world. This is what Professor Lundberg, New York University's noted social philosopher, has done in his new book, and fascinating reading it makes. I go so far as to call it one of the most mind-stretching books of recent years.

Its focus is not on the far future, but on a period of five generations hence, that is, about 150 years from now. Nothing in the Lundberg book is inherently improbable; its extrapolations rest on the basis of present knowledge, which makes them all the more credible.

Merely to list some of the changes the author foresees in the next century is enough to shake the more tradition-minded among us. Automation will have taken over industry completely. ("Factory workers may become almost as rare as blacksmiths and millers.") Unlimited energy—solar and nuclear—will be working tirelessly for man. Purified seawater will be irrigating desert areas, weather will be under control, and so forth.

In his broader predictions Professor Lundberg plunges boldly into more debatable areas. While he sees industrialization spreading throughout the world, he does not see China, India, Africa or South America overtaking the West in this field, and gives cogent reasons why. The backward nations, he feels, will remain relatively backward because they lack the prime materials and because the more sophisticated nations will be continuing their own progress.

As for commerce, while small businesses in the West will have merged into big ones, private ownership will have been restored in the communist countries. In short "Western government as a whole will be converted into a gigantic social service institution relating to every department of modern life."

Frightening? Depends on your concept of government. What cannot be gainsaid, however, is the already noticeable trend toward bigness in our everyday lives, including government. Professor Lundberg is merely projecting that trend towards its logical conclusion. He extends it to urbanization in general, which he thinks will spread until entire countryside are more or less fully urbanized. And everywhere there will be ever-increasing application of scientific methods and devices.

All these and many more aspects of his case are developed by the author in considerable depth. He is not afraid to confront the argument that we are giving ourselves over to the "tyranny of the machine," and reminds us that no machine has ever been as great a tyrant as a Torquemada, a Hitler or a Stalin.

"Machines," he adds, "are as moral or immoral as the men behind them."

Professor Lundberg goes so far as to place future man himself in his crystal ball. Will science enable man to "perfect" man? For the answer to this intriguing question I refer you to the book, as expert a feat of intelligent prognostication as any I have read in years. Professor Lundberg has struck just the right balance between sober fact and far-ranging imagination.
